General Marking Guidance

- All candidates must receive the same treatment. Examiners must mark the last candidate in exactly the same way as they mark the first.
- Mark schemes should be applied positively. Candidates must be rewarded for what they have shown they can do rather than penalised for omissions.
- Examiners should mark according to the mark scheme not according to their perception of where the grade boundaries may lie.
- All the marks on the mark scheme are designed to be awarded. Examiners should always award full marks if deserved, i.e. if the answer matches the mark scheme. Examiners should also be prepared to award zero marks if the candidate's response is not worthy of credit according to the mark scheme.
- Where some judgement is required, mark schemes will provide the principles by which marks will be awarded and exemplification/indicative content will not be exhaustive.
- When examiners are in doubt regarding the application of the mark scheme to a candidate's response, a senior examiner must be consulted before a mark is given.
- Crossed out work should be marked unless the candidate has replaced it with an alternative response.

Specific Marking Guidance

When deciding how to reward an answer, examiners should consult both the indicative content and the associated marking grid(s). When using a levels-based mark scheme, the 'best fit' approach should be used.

- Examiners should first decide which descriptor most closely matches the answer and place it in that level.
- The mark awarded within the level will be decided based on the quality of the answer and will be modified according to how securely all bullet points are displayed at that level.
- Indicative content is exactly that they are factual points that candidates are likely to use to construct their answer.
- It is possible for an answer to be constructed without mentioning some or all of these points, as long as they provide alternative responses to the indicative content that fulfils the requirements of the question. It is the examiner's responsibility to apply their professional judgement to the candidate's response in determining if the answer fulfils the requirements of the question.

Placing a mark within a level

- Examiners should first decide which descriptor most closely matches the answer and place it in that level. The mark awarded within the level will be decided based on the quality of the answer and will be modified according to how securely all bullet points are displayed at that level.
- In cases of uneven performance, the points above will still apply. Candidates will be placed in the level that best describes their answer according to the descriptors in that level. Marks will be awarded towards the top or bottom of that level depending on how they have evidenced each of the descriptor bullet points.
- If the candidate's answer meets the requirements fully, markers should be prepared to award full marks within the level. The top mark in the level is used for work that is as good as can realistically be expected within that level.

Question Number 3	Indicative Content  The Kite Runner  Candidates may include the following in their answers:  • feelings of loss in response to death is a very important element of the novel. Hosseini offers his readers a variety of presentations of death (Baba's death, the stoning scene, the death of Hassan). Candidates may explore a variety of ways in which death and loss are presented  • Hosseini's presentation of grieving. Candidates may offer a discussion of the ways in which different characters display their sadness at the 'loss' of people they encounter (for example, Amir's feelings upon hearing about the death of Hassan.) Candidates may also consider other things that characters grieve for (Amir's grieving for his lost self and the loss of peace he suffers for having failed to protect Hassan)  • Hosseini's presentation of the loss of freedom. Candidates may explore the losses of freedom experienced as a result of the changing political contexts

4	The Kite Runner
	Candidates may include the following in their answers:
	<ul> <li>Hosseini's highlighting of ideas of 'truth' – Baba's insistence that lying is a form of theft lies at the centre of the book and Amir's view of the world. Candidates might go on to identify how Baba's views are shown to be a deception in view of his own personal lies</li> <li>truth to self: the extent to which characters are consistent and 'honest' in their dealings with themselves and the extent to which they deceive themselves – Hassan's unshakeable honesty as contrasted with Amir's willingness to deceive himself</li> <li>truth to others: Hosseini explores how truth and deception affect interpersonal relationships (between Amir and Hassan; between Baba and Amir); Hosseini's use of symbolism to represent this: kite running</li> <li>truth to belief systems: Baba's infidelity and Sanaubar's promiscuity represent differing responses to notions of what is true and acceptable. Assef's dedication to the Taliban cause is a form of truth to self, albeit morally reprehensible</li> <li>truth to nationhood: Hosseini explores the different ways in which characters are 'true' to or 'deceive' their homeland: Mujaheddin, Taliban, Pashtun, Hazara; alongside this is the shifting perception of nationhood from outside Afghanistan in the form of the exploitation of the country by outside forces</li> <li>deception as corruption in the novel is portrayed in terms of sexual abuse, both of Hassan and Sohrab; geo-political abuse on a wide scale is seen as Afghanistan falls prey to Soviet and American influence. The merciless abuse of Afghanistan by the great powers creates conditions ripe for corruption</li> <li>Hosseini's presentation of characters' perceptions of truth changes throughout the novel and they are able in different ways to come to terms with shifting versions of events. This could be linked to the context of living in a postmodern, post-truth society</li> <li>political conceptions of truth: contextual factors may include the picture of Afghanistan under Taliban rule when Amir returns to the country which shows</li></ul>

5	Life of Pi  Candidates may include the following in their answers:
	<ul> <li>Pi is the sole human survivor of the wreck of the Tsimtsum, and having survived this he finds himself faced with a new set of dangers that he must overcome</li> <li>Pi possesses considerable mental resilience in the face of significant challenges (his resilience in the face of hunger for food). He moves from a position of mental prostration to the realisation that he can and needs to keep Richard Parker alive. His resilience emerges from his realisation that 'Only fear can defeat life'</li> <li>the novel demonstrates Pi's ingenuity in facing both external and internal fears and difficulties (the building of the raft, his handling of the Japanese investigators). Pi's experiences can be seen as symbolic of the difficulties of human existence. Pi faces immediate physical danger faced with Richard Parker and has to demonstrate both courage and ingenuity in dealing with the threat he represents</li> <li>candidates may consider the ways in which Pi's personal belief system helps him to survive</li> <li>this is a novel about the telling of tales, and story-telling is in itself a means of survival for Pi. In his conversation with the Japanese investigators at the end of the novel, Pi has the courage to create his own alternative narrative in which he takes on the dangerous and often bleak and unpalatable nature of human existence</li> <li>Pi's survival is supported by his religious independence in the face of pressure from various religious leaders and his parents – a good example is the conversation between the priest, the imam and the pandit where each remains firm in the belief that their religion provides the only way, but where Pi holds to Gandhi's pronouncement that 'All religions are true'</li> <li>candidates may consider the text as a postmodern novel, one which uses the conventions of the adventure story and the novel to address multiple ideas of survival.</li> </ul>

	Candidates may include the following in their answers:
	<ul> <li>the novel explores how Pi makes sense of large-scale belief systems and through these learns to have a more humanistic belief in himself and invites us to ponder what we believe in</li> <li>afloat on the ocean in a small boat and at the mercy of a variety of wild creatures and situations, Pi finds himself forced into positions in which he has to re-evaluate the core of his personal beliefs and how far these relate to conventional views</li> <li>the challenges and difficulties relating to belief that readers may encounter are to some extent mitigated by the certainties about the ending of the tale that are provided by the interpolated anonymous narrative sections. This may make readers question the extent to which there is in fact any real reevaluation taking place</li> <li>the novel's narrative alternatives demonstrate the different ways in which the events of the tale can be presented – this connects to the idea that the world can be understood differently according to different belief traditions</li> <li>the novel's narrative alternatives connect to the ways in which different beliefs function – both independently and in connection, suggesting that there is no single truth</li> <li>Pi develops his own perspective on religious belief and practice. He defends his right to religious independence in the face of pressure from religious leaders and his parents – a good example is the conversation between the priest, the imam and the pandit where each remains firm in the belief that their religion provides the only way, but where Pi holds to Gandhi's pronouncement that 'All religions are true'</li> <li>the picture of Pi as a family man at peace with a host of different religious artefacts suggests there are ways to find harmony in the modern world despite confusing and different beliefs. Pi has survived the turmoil of India, shipwreck and migration (the novel is set during the period known as 'The Emergency' in India, when Indira Gandhi resisted censure and established herself as a dictator, forcing Indians</li></ul>

	<ul> <li>The White Tiger</li> <li>Candidates may include the following in their answers:</li> <li>Adiga paints an ambivalent picture of a country that, for all its potential difficulties, is socially, culturally and politically constantly 'on the move' although often marked by evil and corruption – Balram refers to the Indian 'system' as 'the Darkness' - there is a constant sense of dynamism and purposefulness. The abuse of the education and health systems, for example, is described with relentless comic energy</li> <li>although the novel is full of energy and life, Adiga uses Balram's voice to mock and challenge the corruption, the brutality, the self-interest and the continuing corrosive gap between the rich and poor that underpin life in the contemporary India he presents and represents</li> <li>both the rural and the urban settings Adiga employs in the novel are places full of action: schooling, marriage, illness, work, construction, eating, love and hatred. Readers can never escape from the relentless movement and activity with which Balram presents them</li> <li>the tone of the novel is often satirical in nature. Adiga (via Balram) contrasts stereotypical views of India as a place of peace, charm and beauty with its modern-day manifestation as a constantly moving developing economic power</li> <li>the novel teems with memorable minor characters who illustrate Adiga's ambivalent views, such as: Pinky Madam with her western-inflected view of Indian life, the teachers and doctors of Laxmangarh who are more traditional, the corrupt and manipulative Great Socialist and Balram's forcefully traditional grandmother. These minor characters contribute to the reader's sense of the energy and potential of India</li> <li>Adiga uses the voice of Balram to create a violent and brooding energy. The 'system' he outlines to his imagined correspondent is captured in his final pithy evaluation that it is 'a f – joke'</li> <li>the energy and life Adiga captures are particularly relevant in the context of contemporary issues s</li></ul>

	<ul> <li>Eilis' move to Brooklyn causes 'loss' for her mother, Rose, and later for Jim</li> <li>Father Flood emphasises how different life is in Brooklyn, presenting as a 'gain' the nature of the community there and how much life centres on the shared values of the expatriate community</li> </ul>
	<ul> <li>once arrived in Brooklyn, Eilis weighs up the pros and cons of her new existence; she has 'gained' freedom from the narrow-minded gossip and attitudes of Enniscorthy but has lost her sense of being part of a small and unified community; the size and diversity of her new community in America seems a loss to her. She feels isolated – as if 'she was nobody'</li> </ul>
	• later, however, Brooklyn proves to be supportive. In Father Flood, Miss Fortini, Tony's family and others, Eilis gains assistance, conviviality and friendship; the unmarried girls she shares her life with also prove a significant 'gain' for Eilis when she returns to Ireland, she does not tell them about her marriage to Tony. It might be argued that the gains in one place serve as losses in the other; this comes to the fore in Eilis' relationships with Tony and Jim <ul> <li>when Eilis faces bereavement – a significant personal loss – she is caringly supported by Father Flood</li> </ul>
	the novel, with its contrast of parochial and inward-looking Enniscorthy and diverse, outward-looking Brooklyn, provides a suitable vehicle for Tóibín to explore the gains and losses attached to differing types of community – both Irish and Italian communities in Brooklyn are close-knit and prone to the dangers of prejudice; they are fundamentally different from, but not necessarily superior to, their root communities; gain and loss are not easily evaluated
	<ul> <li>the context of the novel draws on the experiences of migrants and the reasons why they left their home communities for the United States; the balancing forces of community and isolation are brought to the fore.</li> </ul>

	Purple Hibiscus  Candidates may include the following in their answers:  Nigerian traditional ways and beliefs are dismissed by Papa. He embraces capitalist materialism (the reader is constantly made aware of the wealth of his household by comparison with that of Aunty Ifeoma) and sees the old ways as inferior  the clash between the old and new is shown when Papa refuses to maintain relationship with his father, whose traditionalist views he dismisses as 'heathen', and will not allow Kambili and Jaja to get to know their grandfather changes within Nigeria and its culture do not necessarily make things better. Aunty Ifeoma, in the face of the military government and the changing world of the university at Nsukka, finds that she can no longer face her life in Nigeria and emigrates to the United States. Kambili, on the other hand, retains her religious faith, reconciling it with the changes in her country so that she embraces both the old and the new  Papa and Aunty Ifeoma represent the complexity of change. Papa in his politically forward-thinking is courageous in many ways (his defence of Ade Coker, his bravery in publishing his newspaper). Papa is rigid in his religious views – this significantly affects his capacity for tolerance. Aunty Ifeoma, by contrast, is much more liberal and open to change  the children in the novel also demonstrate the different faces of Nigeria. Adichie uses the contrasting characters of Kambili and her cousin Amaka to illustrate the changing experience of growing up in Nigeria. Kambili's material wealth and emotional poverty are contrasted with her cousin's emotional honesty even in the face of growing financial hardship  the novel shows its readers a country facing the turmoil of internal revolution – the military coup, the attack on the freedom of the press, student protests all illustrate the changes that the country is facing  Adichie presents the reality of Nigeria as it tries to find its way to success as a nation; this involves both embracing its past and present and looking t

Question Number 12	<ul> <li>Purple Hibiscus</li> <li>Candidates may include the following in their answers:</li> <li>we see the dilemmas of life for young people in Nigeria: the young female students who, unable to finish their degrees, are obliged to give up their independence to early and limiting marriages</li> <li>Kambili and Jaja are young people who have gained significantly from the material wealth of Nigeria. Their father is a wealthy man and can provide them with plenty of food and material goods. In this they are in stark contrast to their much poorer cousins. Kambili and Jaja face the dilemma that their financial security does not bring them emotional security</li> <li>Papa is a conflicted man capable of great generosity and love but also of narrow-mindedness and cruelty. This creates a significant dilemma for Kambili and Jaja, stunting them emotionally</li> <li>candidates may also comment on the ways in which older characters' lives are also significantly affected: Aunty Ifeoma is eventually driven to emigrate in order to maintain her academic freedom and to secure a better future for Amaka and Obiora; Ade Coker and his wife Yewande are persecuted for his bravery and he ultimately loses his life</li> <li>the text is full of religious dilemmas: for example, Fr Amadi is torn between his priesthood, which as a young man gains him much influence and authority in this society, and his fears about the loss of Nigerian traditions - hence his introduction of Igbo songs into the Rosary; Papa's forceful religious views prevent the flourishing of relationship between Kambili and Jaja and Papa-</li> </ul>
