From a speech about the Yalta Conference to the US Congress by President Roosevelt, 1 March 1945.

Days were spent in discussing momentous matters, and we argued freely and frankly across the table. At the end, on every issue, unanimous agreement was reached. More important even than the agreement of words, we achieved a unity of thought and a way of getting along together. We know that it was Hitler's hope and his generals' hope that we would not agree – that some slight crack might appear in the solid wall of allied unity, a crack that would give him and his fellow gangsters one last hope of escaping their just doom. That is the objective for which his propaganda machine had been working for many months. But Hitler has failed. 5

Never before have the major allies been more closely united – not only in their war aims but also in their peace aims. And they are determined to continue to be united, to be united with each other – and with all peace-loving nations – so that the ideal of lasting peace will become a reality. 10

From a confidential report to President Truman, 'American Relations with the Soviet Union' by Clark Clifford, 24 September 1946. Clifford was one of Truman's senior advisors.

The gravest problem facing the United States today is that of relations with the Soviet Union. Soviet leaders appear to be conducting their nation on a course designed to lead to eventual world domination. Their goals are in direct conflict with American ideals, and the USA has not yet been able to persuade Stalin that world peace and prosperity lie, not in the direction in which the Soviet Union is moving, but in the opposite direction of international cooperation and friendship. Representatives of the USA have been conferencing, bargaining and making agreements with Soviet leaders ever since October 1943. Yet, American disillusionment increases as the Soviet government continues to break the agreements which were made at Tehran, Yalta and Potsdam, or interprets those agreements to suit its own purposes. As long as the Soviet Union adheres to its current policy, the USA should maintain military forces powerful enough to restrain the USSR and give generous economic and political support to those nations not yet in the Soviet sphere. 5 10

From a telegram sent to the Soviet leadership by the Soviet Ambassador to the USA, Nikolai Novikov, 27 September 1946.

US foreign policy has been characterised in the post-war period by a desire for world domination. This hard-line policy is the main obstacle on the road to cooperation. It consists mainly of the fact that the US no longer follows a policy of strengthening cooperation but rather has striven to undermine the unity of the post-war allies. The objective has been to limit or dislodge the influence of the Soviet Union from neighbouring countries. Such a policy is intended to weaken and overthrow the democratic governments in power in these countries, which are friendly towards the USSR, and replace them in the future with new governments that would obediently carry out a policy dictated by the United States. In Germany, the US is taking measures to strengthen reactionary forces for the purposes of opposing democratic reconstruction. One cannot help seeing that such a policy has a clearly outlined anti-Soviet edge and constitutes a serious danger to the cause of peace.
