Sources for use with Section A.

Source 1: From the Bill for the Better Government of India, 1858. This Bill was passed into law as the Government of India Act by the British Parliament on 2 August 1858.

A Bill for the Better Government of India

The government of the territories now held or governed by the East India Company, and all the powers of government carried out by the Company in trust for Her Majesty, shall cease to be carried out by the Company.

Legal power over all territories held or governed by the Company shall now be carried out on behalf of Her Majesty. 5

India shall be governed by, and in the name of, Her Majesty. All the revenues raised in India, and all the tributes and other payments from any territories, shall now be received by, and in the name of, Her Majesty. The money shall be used for the purposes of the Government of India. 10

The Council currently governing in India will, from now on, be called the 'Executive Council of the Governor General of India'.

In addition, a new Council will be set up, with fifteen members. It will be called the 'Council of India'. The majority of the members of this Council will have served or lived in India for at least ten years. 15

Source 2: From a speech by Muhammad Ali Jinnah to the All-Indian Muslim League, March 1940. The meeting in Lahore, was attended by 100,000 Muslims. Jinnah had been asked by the Viceroy about Muslim views on self-government. Here Jinnah is commenting on the status of Muslims in India.

It has always been mistakenly assumed that the Muslims are a minority. However, the Muslims are not a minority in all parts of India. Even according to the British map of India, we Muslims occupy large parts of this country where we are in a majority, such as Bengal, Punjab and Sind. Therefore, the Muslims are a nation by any definition. 20

A British newspaper, The Times, has written that 'the difference between the Hindus and Muslims is not only of religion but also of law and culture. They may be said indeed to represent two entirely distinct and separate civilisations.' However, The Times dismisses these religious differences as superstitions. It claims they 'will die out and India will be moulded into a single nation.' 25

Surely, to characterise these differences as mere 'superstitions' deliberately disregards the history of the sub-continent of India. It also disregards the fundamental difference in Islamic understanding of society compared to that of Hinduism. Even after a thousand years of close contact, Muslims and Hindus are as different today as ever. It cannot be expected that Muslims and Hindus will transform themselves into one nation merely by subjecting them to a democratic constitution and forcing them together. 30
