Sources for use with Section A.

Source 1: From the Presentation Speech made on the award of the Nobel Peace Prize to Nelson Mandela and F W de Klerk, 10 December 1993. The Nobel Peace Prize was a prestigious international award given annually to those considered by a panel of judges to have made the greatest contribution to the promotion of peace.

South Africa was caught in a vicious circle of disintegration into chaos and bloodshed. However, on the eve of the 1990s, its new president, Frederik Willem de Klerk released Nelson Mandela unconditionally after nearly 28 years of imprisonment. Many people have remarked on the apparent lack of bitterness that characterises Mandela's conduct since he was released from prison. 5

The two Prize-Winners have taken initiatives to break the vicious circle that their country was caught up in. These are initiatives the world has noted. These initiatives reflect the personal integrity and great political courage of both men. They have both chosen not to focus on the deep wounds of the past. Mandela has chosen reconciliation rather than the alternative that would inevitably have led to an even bloodier conflict. 10

It is the judgement of the committee that Nelson Mandela and Frederik Willem de Klerk have made a brilliant contribution to peace. They have achieved astonishing results with their policy of peace and reconciliation. 15

Source 2: From an article in The New York Times newspaper, 11 September 1985. The New York Times was an American newspaper with worldwide influence and readership. Here the writer is commenting on the decision by some members of the European Common Market to impose sanctions on South Africa.

Eleven West European nations agreed today to impose sanctions against South Africa. Britain declined to participate, saying it needed time to study the likely effect.

These sanctions, adopted a day after US President Reagan announced economic sanctions, are largely symbolic, according to European diplomats. The diplomats said the measures were intended to emphasise unhappiness with South Africa's failure to move more rapidly toward ending apartheid. 20

The Western European sanctions include an embargo on oil, a ban on military cooperation, discouragement of cultural and scientific links and a ban on nuclear cooperation. 25

The sanctions already announced by President Reagan included a ban on exports of computers to South African police agencies, a ban on nuclear exports, a ban on loans to South Africa, and a possible ban on the sale of Krugerrand gold coins.

Officials say that the European sanctions involve few significant changes in policy and are unlikely to cause South Africa much inconvenience. The Common Market countries already ban exports of armaments and nuclear material and prohibit military cooperation. 30

West Germany, Britain and Belgium were the firmest opponents of any significant new sanctions. Britain and West Germany are South Africa's biggest trading partners, supplying more than 25 per cent of South African imports. Belgium opposes meaningful sanctions because its gem-cutting industry imports over $1 billion worth of South African diamonds a year. 35
