Sources for use with SECTION A.

Source 1: From Douglass Monthly. This was a newspaper published and edited by Frederick Douglass an escaped slave who had gained national and international fame as an abolitionist, lecturer and writer. He was writing in response to the proposals for emancipation shortly before the proclamation of January 1863 was made.

Whether slavery will be abolished in the manner now proposed by President Lincoln depends on two conditions. The first is that the slave states will be in rebellion on or after the first day of January 1863. The second is that we in the North have the ability to put down that rebellion. Of the first there is no doubt. The South is thoroughly in rebellion. However all fears for the abolition of slavery, arising from concern that the South cannot be defeated, can be dismissed. We may confidently look forward to the final proclamation, granting freedom and freedom forever within the rebel states. 5

On the second point nothing need be said. We have full power to put down the rebellion. Unless one man is a match for four, unless the South breeds braver and better men than the North, unless slavery is more precious than liberty then the men of the loyal states will put down this rebellion and slavery will end. Now let the government go forward in its mission of liberty as the only condition of peace and union. Let only the men who agree heartily to the anti-slavery policy of the government be given military command; let the black man have an arm as well as a heart in this war and the tide of battle will steadily turn in our favour. America will sit higher than ever as a queen among nations with the rebellion suppressed and slavery abolished. 10

The newspapers have published a proclamation, dated on the first day of January 1863, signed by the President of the United States, in which he orders and declares all slaves within ten of the states of the Confederacy to be free. 20

We leave it to the instincts of those who show concern for the welfare of slaves to pass judgement on a measure by which several millions of slaves of an inferior race, peaceful and contented labourers in their sphere are doomed to extermination. Our own anger at those who have attempted to impose the most hated measure in the history of man is accompanied by our profound contempt for the helpless rage of the North. 25

This proclamation will have another effect in calming the fears of those who think that the war might end by some reconstruction of the old Union or some renewal of close political relations with the United States. These fears have never been shared by me. The proclamation is the fullest guarantee of the impossibility of such a result. It has established a state of things which can lead to but one of three possible consequences: the extermination of the slaves, the exile of the whole white population from the Confederacy, or the absolute and total separation of these States from the United States. 30 35

This proclamation is also an authentic statement by the Government of the United States of its inability to control the South by force of arms, and as such must be accepted by neutral nations, who will no longer be able to find any justification in withholding our just claims to formal recognition.
