Sources for use with Section A.

Source 1: From a speech made by Joseph Goebbels to journalists, 15 March 1933. Here he is commenting on the role he envisages for the new Ministry of Popular Enlightenment and Propaganda.

The setting up of the new Ministry of Popular Enlightenment and Propaganda by the Government is a revolutionary act, in so far as we no longer intend to leave the people to make up their own minds.

I view the main task of the new Ministry as being to establish co-ordination between the Government and all people. It is not enough for people just to be reconciled to our regime or persuaded to adopt a neutral attitude towards us. We want people to completely give in to us Nazis. In Germany today, the people must grasp that Nazi ideology must be accepted. 5

To achieve this the following must happen. Firstly, all institutions of public information belonging to the Reich and the Länder must be centralised in one organisation. Secondly, propaganda must be delivered in a way that makes use of the most modern and effective technology. 10

Propaganda is not an end in itself, but a means to an end. The aim of our movement is to mobilise people and win them over for the national revolutionary ideal. Clearly this aim is being achieved and that is the result of our propaganda methods. The new Ministry is completely focused on uniting the nation behind the ideal of the national revolution. 15

We live in an age when policies must have mass support. The leaders of today must be modern princes of the people, they must be able to understand the people but they need not follow the people slavishly. It is the leaders' duty to tell the masses what the leaders want and put it across to the masses in such a way that they understand it too. 20

Source 2: From Walther Schulze-Wechsungen, Political Propaganda, published in a Nazi monthly magazine, 1934. Schulze-Wechsungen was a Nazi member of the Reichstag and also a regional propaganda chief. Here he comments on the functions and objectives of Nazi propaganda.

Propaganda must shape the thinking and understanding of the masses to transform ideas into reality. NSDAP opponents do not understand that repetition and simplicity are the ways to control the emotional world of the masses. The masses are mostly very forgetful, and their understanding is not that of the educated. The purpose of propaganda is not to please the educated intellectuals but rather to reach the feelings of the great masses. 25

The NSDAP, to give an example, recognises Marxism as a powerful enemy of the people and aims for its annihilation. Our propaganda has to undermine Marxism in the minds and hearts of the masses and replace it with a new theory about national greatness. Alongside the propaganda struggle against Marxism, we also fight against the 'war guilt' lie and the Treaty of Versailles. 30

The true leader, our Führer, comes from the people and represents the people. He is the personification of public opinion and winning over the people is his final goal. Public opinion should never be confused with the noisy views of a class or group in whom the people have no interest. 35

The National Socialist movement has trained a group of people to be propagandists. These propagandists serve no interest group. They are there to express the will of the people. They are central to creating a state with one single purpose: 'All for Germany'. 40
