General Marking Guidance

- All candidates must receive the same treatment. Examiners must mark the first candidate in exactly the same way as they mark the last.
- Mark schemes should be applied positively. Candidates must be rewarded for what they have shown they can do rather than penalised for omissions.
- Examiners should mark according to the mark scheme not according to their perception of where the grade boundaries may lie.
- There is no ceiling on achievement. All marks on the mark scheme should be used appropriately.
- All the marks on the mark scheme are designed to be awarded. Examiners should always award full marks if deserved, i.e. if the answer matches the mark scheme. Examiners should also be prepared to award zero marks if the candidate's response is not worthy of credit according to the mark scheme.
- Where some judgement is required, mark schemes will provide the principles by which marks will be awarded and exemplification may be limited.
- When examiners are in doubt regarding the application of the mark scheme to a candidate's response, the team leader must be consulted.
- Crossed out work should be marked UNLESS the candidate has replaced it with an alternative response.

Section A: Indicative content

Option 1A: The Making of Modern Europe, 1805–71

Question	Indicative content
1	Answers will be credited according to candidates' deployment of material in relation to the qualities outlined in the generic mark scheme. The indicative content below is not prescriptive and candidates are not required to include all the material which is indicated as relevant. Other relevant material not suggested below must also be credited. Candidates are expected to use the extracts and their own knowledge to consider the views presented in the extracts. Reference to the works of named historians is not expected, but candidates may consider historians' viewpoints in framing their argument. Candidates should use their understanding of issues of interpretation to reach a reasoned conclusion concerning the view that Napoleon's failure in the campaign of 1813 was mainly due to the impact of Prussian and Austrian military reforms. In considering the extracts, the points made by the authors should be analysed and evaluated. Relevant points may include: Extract 1 <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• By 1813, both the Prussians and the Austrians had improved their ability to counter the French by introducing military reforms; the Prussians were more flexible, and the Austrians had imitated French systems of fighting</li> <li>• Although Napoleon was relatively successful early in 1813, the Prussians gave a good account of themselves</li> <li>• The military reforms meant that Napoleon could be outfought at Leipzig, and that his opponents were fighting on a more equal footing</li> <li>• Prussian and Austrian command systems, and individual commanders, were important factors in the failure of Napoleon at Leipzig.</li> </ul> Extract 2 <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• The army Napoleon raised for the 1813 campaign was not as experienced or well-trained as in previous campaigns</li> <li>• The French army was not only weakened by the loss of men and horses in the Russian campaign but particularly by the difficulty in replacing them</li> <li>• Napoleon could no longer rely on the resources and support from allies and occupied areas in northern Germany</li> <li>• Napoleon's own shortcomings, such as his impatience and unwillingness to negotiate, contributed to his defeat at Leipzig.</li> </ul> Candidates should relate their own knowledge to the material in the extracts to support the view that Napoleon's failure in the campaign of 1813 was mainly due to the impact of Prussian and Austrian military reforms. Relevant points may include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• After the defeats of 1806, Scharnhorst began a root and branch reform of the Prussian military, from command to ground troops, that enabled the Prussian army to fight the French more effectively in 1813</li> <li>• The reforms used by Prussia to circumvent French restrictions on Prussian army recruitment after Tilsit, created an estimated 150 000 trained reservists who could be called up in 1813 to serve in a Landwehr militia</li> <li>• Both Prussia and Austria made reforms that reflected the lessons learned from their earlier defeats by Napoleon; in 1813, well-instructed and trained troops were used to employ the Trachenberg Plan</li> <li>• The Austrian commander Schwarzenberg and, particularly, the Prussian general, Blücher, made decisive contributions at the battle of Leipzig; Prussian troops defeated Marshal Marmont and stormed Leipzig itself.</li> </ul>

Question	Indicative content
	Candidates should relate their own knowledge to the material in the extracts to counter or modify the view that Napoleon's failure in the campaign of 1813 was mainly due to the impact of Prussian and Austrian military reforms. Relevant points may include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li data-bbox="347 353 1398 450">• It was the disastrous impact of the Russian campaign (1812) on the men, resources and horses available to Napoleon in 1813 that was fundamental to his failure; in defeat the French satellite states began to desert him</li><li data-bbox="347 465 1353 562">• The Prussian and Austrian armed forces did not face Napoleon on their own. They were part of the Sixth Coalition, which relied heavily on the strength of the Russian army and was bankrolled by the British</li><li data-bbox="347 577 1398 674">• The Prussians suffered defeat by Napoleon's forces at Lützen and Bautzen (May 1813) and, even after Austria joined the Coalition in August 1813, Napoleon was victorious at Dresden</li><li data-bbox="347 689 1374 786">• Napoleon's own weaknesses led to failure, for example, in 1813, he was less willing to allow his commanders responsibility, and several times during the campaign undermined attempts to negotiate a peace.</li></ul>

Section B: Indicative content

Option 1A: The Making of Modern Europe, 1805–71

Question	Indicative content
2	Answers will be credited according to candidates' deployment of material in relation to the qualities outlined in the generic mark scheme. The indicative content below is not prescriptive and candidates are not required to include all the material which is indicated as relevant. Candidates are expected to reach a judgement on the statement that the collapse of the 1848-49 revolutions in Germany and Italy was mainly due to the weaknesses of nationalism. Arguments and evidence that the collapse of the 1848-49 revolutions in Germany and Italy was mainly due to the weaknesses of nationalism should be analysed and evaluated. Relevant points may include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• In both Germany and Italy, the cause of nationalism was not able to gain sufficient popular support to mount a concerted and sustained attack on the restored European order of 1815</li> <li>• Despite early successes in both Germany and Italy, nationalists were not organised enough to use the revolutions to achieve unification. This was particularly so in Italy.</li> <li>• In Germany, nationalists were fundamentally undermined by the lengthy debate in the Frankfurt Assembly as to whether a unified Germany should follow a Grossdeustchland or Kleinsdeutschland path</li> <li>• In Italy, the attempt by Charles Albert of Piedmont to launch a War of Independence (1849) was undermined by suspicion of Piedmontese self-interest and the failure to ignite sufficient Italian patriotic fervour</li> <li>• Mazzinian nationalism in Italy was undermined by Mazzini's failure to secure the Roman Republic as a possible base for a future united Italy.</li> </ul> Arguments and evidence that the collapse of the 1848-49 revolutions in Germany and Italy was not mainly due to the weaknesses of nationalism/was due to other factors should be analysed and evaluated. Relevant points may include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Nationalists did make significant gains, particularly in Germany where a national assembly, meeting in Frankfurt, was elected and organised to represent the German states</li> <li>• In both Germany and Italy, it was the competing objectives of the rebels that made it difficult for revolutionaries to sustain early successes</li> <li>• In both Germany and Italy, it was the revival in power of the forces of conservatism that crushed the revolutions. In Germany mainly the Prussian army and in Italy mainly the Austrian Army</li> <li>• It was the concerted counter-revolutionary effort of the conservative great powers of Austria, Prussia and Russia that ensured the failure of the revolutions</li> <li>• In Italy, the revolutions were thwarted particularly by the response of the Pope, who after initially accepting the Roman Republic, used his power both within Italy and across Europe to undermine the revolutionaries.</li> </ul> Other relevant material must be credited.

Question	Indicative content
3	Answers will be credited according to candidates' deployment of material in relation to the qualities outlined in the generic mark scheme. The indicative content below is not prescriptive and candidates are not required to include all the material which is indicated as relevant. Candidates are expected to reach a judgement on how significant developments outside Italy were in influencing the completion of Italian unification in the years 1861-70. Arguments and evidence that developments outside Italy were significant in influencing the completion of Italian unification in the years 1861-70 should be analysed and evaluated. Relevant points may include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• In 1861, Napoleon III's acquiescence to the unification of Italy under Piedmont, after having been previously obstructive at Villafranca, allowed the creation of the Kingdom of Italy without fear of French interference</li> <li>• Throughout the period, Britain's tacit support for Italian unification encouraged Italian nationalists and British neutrality, in both 1866 and 1870, smoothed the way for the annexation of Venetia and Rome</li> <li>• The increasing likelihood of war between Austria and Prussia led to a formal military agreement with Prussia in April 1866; Italy subsequently received Venetia as a reward for its role in the Austro-Prussian war</li> <li>• Italian military failures at Lissa and Custoza meant that it was only the defeat of Austria by Prussia at Sadowa in 1866 that allowed Italy to gain Venetia as a result of the Austro-Prussian war</li> <li>• In 1870, increased tension between France and Prussia opened up possibilities for the Italians to attempt to gain Rome in return for the request for support from Napoleon III</li> <li>• In 1870, the withdrawal of the French garrison from Rome and the French defeat at Sedan gave Italy the opportunity to take-over Rome.</li> </ul> Arguments and evidence that developments outside Italy were not significant/other factors were more significant in influencing the completion of Italian unification in the years 1861-70 should be analysed and evaluated. Relevant points may include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• It required the Kingdom of Italy to take advantage of the opportunities offered by outside development, particularly pursuing all avenues to acquire Venetia and to enable Rome to become the 'true' Italian capital</li> <li>• King Victor Emmanuel was a driving force in ensuring that Italian foreign policy remained focused on completing Italian unification</li> <li>• The Italians did contribute in some way to the acquisition of Venetia; the Italian entry into the war of 1866 meant that Austria was weakened by having to fight a war in the south as well</li> <li>• Italian nationalists encouraged the completion of unification throughout the period, particularly putting pressure on the new Kingdom actively to pursue the establishment of Rome as the Italian capital</li> <li>• It was the Italian army that invaded and took control of Rome in 1870 and the people of Rome who voted by an overwhelming majority in the plebiscite of October 1870 to become part of the Italian kingdom.</li> </ul> Other relevant material must be credited.
