General Marking Guidance

- All candidates must receive the same treatment. Examiners must mark the first candidate in exactly the same way as they mark the last.
- Mark schemes should be applied positively. Candidates must be rewarded for what they have shown they can do rather than penalised for omissions.
- Examiners should mark according to the mark scheme not according to their perception of where the grade boundaries may lie.
- There is no ceiling on achievement. All marks on the mark scheme should be used appropriately.
- All the marks on the mark scheme are designed to be awarded. Examiners should always award full marks if deserved, i.e. if the answer matches the mark scheme. Examiners should also be prepared to award zero marks if the candidate's response is not worthy of credit according to the mark scheme.
- Where some judgement is required, mark schemes will provide the principles by which marks will be awarded and exemplification may be limited.
- When examiners are in doubt regarding the application of the mark scheme to a candidate's response, the team leader must be consulted.
- Crossed out work should be marked UNLESS the candidate has replaced it with an alternative response.

How to award marks when level descriptions are used

1. Finding the right level

The first stage is to decide which level the answer should be placed in. To do this, use a 'best-fit' approach, deciding which level most closely describes the quality of the answer. Answers can display characteristics from more than one level, and where this happens markers must use the guidance below and their professional judgement to decide which level is most appropriate.

For example, one stronger passage at L4 would not by itself merit a L4 mark, but it might be evidence to support a high L3 mark, unless there are substantial weaknesses in other areas. Similarly, an answer that fits best in L3 but which has some characteristics of L2 might be placed at the bottom of L3. An answer displaying some characteristics of L3 and some of L1 might be placed in L2.

2. Finding a mark within a level

After a level has been decided on, the next stage is to decide on the mark within the level. The instructions below tell you how to reward responses within a level. However, where a level has specific guidance about how to place an answer within a level, always follow that guidance.

Levels containing two marks only

Start with the presumption that the work will be at the top of the level. Move down to the lower mark if the work only just meets the requirements of the level.

Levels containing three or more marks

Markers should be prepared to use the full range of marks available in a level and not restrict marks to the middle. Markers should start at the middle of the level (or the upper-middle mark if there is an even number of marks) and then move the mark up or down to find the best mark. To do this, they should take into account how far the answer meets the requirements of the level:

- If it meets the requirements fully, markers should be prepared to award full marks within the level. The top mark in the level is used for answers that are as good as can realistically be expected within that level
- If it only barely meets the requirements of the level, markers should consider awarding marks at the bottom of the level. The bottom mark in the level is used for answers that are the weakest that can be expected within that level
- The middle marks of the level are used for answers that have a reasonable match to the descriptor. This might represent a balance between some characteristics of the level that are fully met and others that are only barely met.

Indicative content

Examiners are reminded that indicative content is provided as an illustration to markers of some of the material that may be offered by students. It does not show required content and alternatives should be credited where valid.

Section A: Indicative content

Option 1D: The Cold War and Hot War in Asia, 1945–90

Question	Indicative content
1	Answers will be credited according to candidates' deployment of material in relation to the qualities outlined in the generic mark scheme. The indicative content below is not prescriptive and candidates are not required to include all the material which is indicated as relevant. Other relevant material not suggested below must also be credited. Candidates are expected to use the extracts and their own knowledge to consider the views presented in the extracts. Reference to the works of named historians is not expected, but candidates may consider historians' viewpoints in framing their argument. Candidates should use their understanding of issues of interpretation to reach a reasoned conclusion concerning the view that it was Japan that benefited the most from the Korean War. In considering the extracts, the points made by the authors should be analysed and evaluated. Relevant points may include: Extract 1 <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Japan gained the most out of the Korean War, as it did not commit any troops but experienced an economic recovery as a result of it</li> <li>• The economic growth experienced as a result of the Korean War improved living standards in Japan</li> <li>• The presence of the US military in Japan during the War and US supply orders put money into the economy and rebooted a moribund industrial sector</li> <li>• The Korean War not only allowed the Japanese economy to recover to levels prior to the Second World War but also provided the seeds of potential future growth.</li> </ul> Extract 2 <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• China emerged from the Korean War in a better international position than it was in before the War and having regained its status as a world power</li> <li>• China's willingness to, and relative success in, challenging the US had brought China into the world of international diplomacy, with the peace negotiations and the enhanced reputation of Zhou Enlai</li> <li>• The nature of China's contribution to North Korea meant that its influence was not only increased locally but in other parts of the world as well</li> <li>• China's relationship with the USSR benefited, as Stalin now treated China in a more positive manner.</li> </ul> Candidates should relate their own knowledge to the material in the extracts to support the view that it was Japan that benefited the most from the Korean War. Relevant points may include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Japan was able to take advantage of the fact that the US war effort was conducted from General MacArthur's post-1945 HQ in Japan, and its strategic positioning as a place from which to conduct and supply the War</li> <li>• In 1950, Japan was suffering from an economic downturn with business bankruptcies and unemployment and industrial unrest growing</li> <li>• US military supply orders combined with increased domestic demand, generated by the spending power of the US armed forces, saw Japanese business profits rise, and increased economic efficiency and productivity</li> <li>• China suffered huge casualties without achieving clear offensive victories in the War itself, remained an international pariah in the UN and, despite improved relations, the USSR treated China as its junior partner.</li> </ul>

Question	Indicative content
	Candidates should relate their own knowledge to the material in the extracts to counter or modify the view that it was Japan that benefited the most from the Korean War. Relevant points may include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• By 1952-53, the Chinese were full participants in the armistice negotiations in Korea, and the 1953 agreement was signed between representatives of the US, North Korean and Chinese military</li><li>• China's intervention on behalf of the North Koreans brought it to the attention of nationalist liberation groups across the world, many of whom began to look to China for support, e.g. south-east Asia, Africa</li><li>• China's relationship with the two main post-war superpowers changed. The US factored China more into its foreign policy, despite not formally recognising it, and the USSR made significant economic commitments</li><li>• As a result of the War, Japan continued to suffer inflationary tendencies that impacted its export market and became even more dependent on the US, e.g. US-Japanese security treaty of 1951</li><li>• Other beneficiaries: NSC-68 confirmed the pre-eminent anti-communist status of the US; the USSR maintained its status within the communist sphere without the use of ground troops; the UN showed its ability to act.</li></ul>

Section B: Indicative content

Option 1D: The Cold War and Hot War in Asia, 1945–90

Question	Indicative content
2	Answers will be credited according to candidates' deployment of material in relation to the qualities outlined in the generic mark scheme. The indicative content below is not prescriptive and candidates are not required to include all the material which is indicated as relevant. Candidates are expected to reach a judgement on the statement that the growing crisis in South Vietnam, in the years 1956-60, was mainly caused by interference from communist North Vietnam. Arguments and evidence that the growing crisis in South Vietnam, in the years 1954-60, was mainly caused by interference from communist North Vietnam should be analysed and evaluated. Relevant points may include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• After the Geneva Accords (1954), North Vietnamese leaders encouraged communist Viet Minh in the south to stay in their local areas and agitate for change</li> <li>• In 1959, North Vietnam formally declared a 'People's War' against South Vietnam, with the aim of unifying Vietnam under communist rule</li> <li>• In 1959, having previously provided ad hoc support and arms to the communists in the South, North Vietnam began the construction of a more organised supply route via the Ho Chi Minh trail</li> <li>• In 1959, North Vietnam for the first time sent trained insurgents into the South from the North. The fighters were specifically recruited from those southern Vietnamese who had fled to the North since 1954</li> <li>• It became clear in 1960 that North Vietnam had begun to fund and resource an organisation designed to act as an 'armed force' to counter the ARVN. The NLF (Vietcong) was officially revealed in December 1960.</li> </ul> Arguments and evidence that the growing crisis in South Vietnam, in the years 1954-60, was not mainly caused by interference from communist North Vietnam/was caused by other factors should be analysed and evaluated. Relevant points may include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• It was really only in 1959 that North Vietnam began to directly intervene in South Vietnam; from 1954-59, the North Vietnam leaders were focused more on dealing with nascent domestic resistance to their rule</li> <li>• Discontent was driven by the refusal of Diem, with the full support of the US, to hold the unifying elections in 1956 that had been agreed at Geneva in 1954; the predicted outcome had been a victory for Ho Chi Minh</li> <li>• The final withdrawal of French ground troops from Vietnam in 1956 signified the end of the colonial era and empowered nationalists in South Vietnam to resist a government perceived by many as illegitimate</li> <li>• Diem's government created the beginnings of resistance independent of the communist North. The government did little for ordinary people after years of war and was seen by many as authoritarian, elitist and corrupt</li> <li>• US political and military support for South Vietnam's leadership angered many. The growing influence of MAAG made many nationalists believe that one imperial power had merely been swapped for another</li> <li>• The situation in Laos spilled over into South Vietnam; the Laotian government, covertly supported by US advisers in South Vietnam, was under threat from the Pathet Lao insurgency openly supported by Hanoi.</li> </ul> Other relevant material must be credited.

Question	Indicative content
3	Answers will be credited according to candidates' deployment of material in relation to the qualities outlined in the generic mark scheme. The indicative content below is not prescriptive and candidates are not required to include all the material which is indicated as relevant. Candidates are expected to reach a judgement on whether the most effective feature of US policy in Vietnam under President Nixon, in the years 1969-72, was the Phoenix Programme. Arguments and evidence that the most effective feature of US policy in Vietnam under President Nixon, in the years 1969-72, was the Phoenix Programme should be analysed and evaluated. Relevant points may include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• The Programme used anti-communist infiltrators to collect information on, and target, over 80,000 Vietcong members and organisers who were captured, 'turned' or killed</li> <li>• The impact of the Programme contributed to Saigon's success in regaining control of large areas of South Vietnam. By 1969, Saigon was in control of 50 per cent of the country compared to 20 per cent before 1969</li> <li>• The Programme disrupted the ability of the Vietcong to embed its local organisers within local, particularly rural, communities and so undermined the heart of the communist propaganda campaigns</li> <li>• The Programme appears to have had some positive impact on US and ARVN troop morale. Ordinary soldiers were often used to carry out these on-the-ground operations, giving them a sense of progress in the war</li> <li>• The effectiveness of the Programme was reflected in North Vietnamese concern over its impact and its attempts to counter its effects. After the war, the communist authorities continued to search for anyone involved.</li> </ul> Arguments and evidence that the Phoenix Programme was not the most effective feature of US policy in Vietnam under President Nixon in the years 1969-72 should be analysed and evaluated. Relevant points may include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• The covert nature of the Phoenix Programme meant that it was not widely publicised. When the nature, and potential illegality, of its operations became publicly known, it was rapidly closed down by Congress</li> <li>• Nixon's key public policy of 'Vietnamisation', by increasingly handing over the war effort to the ARVN, enabled the significant withdrawal of US troops and bolstered Nixon's claims of 'peace with honour'</li> <li>• The bombing of Cambodia and Laos, initially secret, significantly disrupted the flow of North Vietnamese resources into South Vietnam via the Ho Chi Minh trail</li> <li>• Nixon's commitment to US airpower in 1972 was crucial to pushing back the North Vietnamese Easter offensive (Operation Linebacker) and bringing all sides back to the negotiating table ('Christmas' bombing)</li> <li>• Nixon's commitment to a wider détente with China and the USSR had a mediating impact on the main communist powers' commitment to intervention and attitude to the peace negotiations</li> <li>• It was Nixon and Kissinger's deployment of diplomacy in the years 1969-72, both with regard to the public Paris meetings, and using back-door negotiations, that ultimately led to the peace agreement of January 1973.</li> </ul> Other relevant material must be credited.
