Extracts for use with Section C.

Extract 1: From, John Hite and Chris Hinton, Weimar and Nazi Germany, published 2000.

It is true that from 1933 Hitler prepared Germany for war. He did this because he thought war in Europe was inevitable. However, it is too simple to say that the various stages of rearmament, militarisation and the annexations of Austria and Czechoslovakia were part of a master plan. His economic policies as well as his foreign policy was conducted by seizing opportunities as they occurred. 5
Hitler got what he could from the situation he was in, and was always ready to change his mind. Thus, whereas in Mein Kampf Hitler spoke of being allied with Britain to fight the Soviet Union, in 1939 he was allied with the Soviet Union and fighting Britain. He was not planning a general war in 1939 but, having decided that war with Poland was necessary, he began a war that he thought 10 would be easily won, against an isolated opponent. He did not intend war with Poland to turn into a world war.

Extract 2: From, Ian Kershaw, Hitler: Profiles in Power, published 1991.

Hitler's ideas were completely formed by the time he wrote Mein Kampf in 1924, and he never changed them. He saw himself as the man who could fulfil Germany's historic destiny. The essence of Hitler's world-view was his belief in history as racial struggle, which for Germans meant the defeat of both Slavs and Jews. He thought Germany's future could be secured only through the conquest of Lebensraum (living space) at the expense of Russia. There would have to be a fight to the finish with Marxism, or, in other words, destroy the 'Jewish Bolshevism' of the Soviet Union. Only when these things were achieved 15 could Germany be in its rightful place of European domination. The importance of these ideas is that Hitler held onto them with extraordinary stubbornness for over twenty years. These ideas, held by a dictator with unlimited power, caused the Second World War. 20
