Sources for use with Section A.

Answer the questions in Section A on the option for which you have been prepared.

Option 2A.1: Anglo-Saxon England and the Anglo-Norman Kingdom, c1053–1106

Source for use with Question 1(a).

Source 1: From Orderic Vitalis, Ecclesiastical History, written 1110–42. Vitalis was an Anglo-Norman monk, born in England in 1075. He was sent to a Norman monastery when he was 11 years old. Here he is commenting on everyday life in England under the Normans.

In the years after 1070, peace reigned over England, and some security returned to its inhabitants. English and Normans were living peacefully together in boroughs, towns and cities, and were intermarrying with each other. You could see many villages or town markets filled with displays of French merchandise. The English no longer wore the Anglo-Saxon clothes that the Normans had regarded with contempt. The English were completely transformed by foreign fashions. No one dared to pillage, and everyone cultivated his own fields in safety and lived contentedly with his neighbour. 5

The King's passion for justice dominated the kingdom, encouraging others to follow his example. He attempted to learn some of the English language, so that he could understand the pleas of the conquered people without an interpreter. He generously gave fair judgements to each claimant as justice required. 10

Source for use with Question 1(b).

Source 2: From the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, Version D. This version of the Chronicle was written by Anglo-Saxon monks in Worcester, in the West Midlands. It was based upon news that was brought to the monastery in letters and by visitors. This is the entry for 1067–68.

Eadric the Wild and the Welsh became hostile and fought against the garrison of the castle at Hereford and inflicted many injuries. King William imposed a heavy tax on the wretched people there and ravaged all the land that he overran. 15

Then King William went to Devonshire and besieged the city of Exeter for eighteen days. A large part of the King's army perished there. King William made fair promises to the inhabitants of Exeter, although he did not keep them. The inhabitants surrendered Exeter to the King because their Wessex thegns had not come to support them. 20

Mathilda came to this country and was crowned as queen at Westminster. Then the King was informed that the people in the north meant to rebel against him. He then went to Nottingham and built a castle there. He then built two castles in York and another in Lincoln and castles everywhere in that region.

Meanwhile, one of Harold Godwinson's sons came unexpectedly from Ireland and sailed a naval force into the River Avon. His army ravaged all over that district. Then his army went to Bristol and meant to take the city by force, but the citizens fought against them fiercely. 25

Option 2A.2: England and the Angevin Empire in the reign of Henry II, 1154–89

Source for use with Question 2(a).

Source 3: From the Chronicle of the Princes. The chronicle was compiled in the late twelfth and early thirteenth centuries in a Welsh monastery founded by Robert FitzStephen, one of Henry II's most important vassals in Wales. Here the chronicle comments on a discussion between Henry II and the Young King in 1173.

Whilst the King of England, Henry II, was staying in his lands beyond the sea, Henry the Younger, his son, came to him. Young Henry asked his father what he was able to do, or what he should do, now that he had been crowned king. For although Young Henry was now a king with many knights under him, he still had no means by which he could reward these knights, unless he obtained funds from his father, King Henry II. 5

Young Henry's father replied that he would give the Young King twenty pounds daily from the money of the Young King's land for Young Henry's expenses. And Young King Henry, when he heard that, said that he had never heard of a king being a paid servant, and that he would not be such a servant. 10

Source for use with Question 2(b).

Source 4: From a history written by Gerald of Wales in the years 1184–88. Gerald of Wales was a clergyman. Henry II had refused him a bishopric in Wales in 1176 but, from 1184, he had employed Gerald of Wales in his court as a clerk and chaplain.

To the dismay of the great men of the realm, Thomas, Archbishop of Canterbury, died at the hands of unholy men. This was after the Archbishop had suffered banishment for nearly seven years, worn sackcloth on every part of his body, and devoted himself to reading and prayer. Now his martyrdom finally demonstrated the extent of his sufferings and the glory he deserved. 15

Thomas himself had willingly opened the doors of the sanctuary to his furious enemies. Thomas met their drawn swords boldly and bowed his consecrated head to their violence. This took place in the Cathedral of Canterbury in front of the altar. There, Thomas received four wounds on the crown of his head – the shaven crown, which used to be regarded as a token of the protection due to the clergy. These wounds were inflicted with great violence by four brutal retainers from the court. 20

Thomas, this famous soldier and martyr of Christ, was renowned for suffering, just as Christ had suffered. The Archbishop exchanged a corruptible crown on earth for an incorruptible crown in Heaven. Numerous miracles were performed in his name, including the marvellous restoration of sight to the blind. It plainly appeared that he was a new martyr. 25
