Sources for use with Section A.

Answer the questions in Section A on the option for which you have been prepared.

Option 2C.1: France in revolution, 1774–99

Source for use with Question 1(a).

Source 1: From Pierre-René Choudieu, Memoirs and Notes of Choudieu 1761–1838, written in the 1830s. Choudieu served as a Jacobin deputy in the early 1790s. Here he reflects on the White Terror in Paris during the mid-1790s.

The jeunesse dorée were enthusiastic young men, who had never lost anything during the revolution. However, they still claimed to be victims of the Terror, with a duty to avenge their relatives who had died on the scaffold. The jeunesse dorée patrolled the Palais-Royal and the Tuileries gardens daily and sang the 'People's Awakening' song, which called for the death of the 'terrorist' republicans. 5

In their leisure moments, the jeunesse dorée amused themselves with a dance called the 'farandole'. Anyone who refused to join in the dance was thrown into nearby water troughs. Fréron, their leader, demanded in the Convention that the Hotel de Ville of Paris should be completely destroyed because it had sheltered Robespierre. He also wanted the Jacobins' club demolished. 10

Source for use with Question 1(b).

Source 2: From a Paris police report, written in late 1797. Here the report considers the condition of France at that time.

A great amount of public anxiety has been caused by the financial situation. Investors in government bonds have lost money and so have been badly affected. People grumble angrily about public poverty, and critics of 18 Fructidor* say that the cause of poverty is due to that coup. The number of jobless workers has increased in Paris, and there are rumours that unemployment is just as great in the regions. This great distress, with winter coming, raises the fear of unfortunate consequences. 15

Rumours are rife that another 18 Fructidor* is going to take place soon and that the Directory is going to purge the two Councils once again. Some people, speaking of the present Constitution, say that it is not at all popular and that it is an aristocratic government. The only difference, it is said, between the Constitution of 1791 and that of 1795 is that the implementation of the laws, instead of being carried out by one king, is carried out by five Directors. Currently, public opinion is worried about future political developments and complains about the financial situation. Nevertheless, an outward appearance of calm continues to exist. 20 25

Option 2C.2: Russia in revolution, 1894–1924

Source for use with Question 2(a).

Source 3: From Dorian Blair, Russian Hazard, published 1937. Blair was a British secret service agent who worked in Russia in 1917. Here he considers the Provisional Government.

During each day, the members of the Provisional Government and their supporters held hectic conferences to decide what should be done. Then, in the evenings, they boasted loudly at public meetings, telling the people how splendid it would all be when they had done it.

The majority of Provisional Government members were completely incompetent, of course. They lacked any experience of political control. There was simply no tradition to guide them. Furthermore, the government was a coalition without clear objectives. The parties involved were mistrustful of each other and they had achieved their only aim by removing the Tsar. The only point they were at all united on was to continue with the war.

Source for use with Question 2(b).

Source 4: From Victor Serge, Memoirs of a Revolutionary, published 1951. Serge was a Russian revolutionary and writer who joined the Bolsheviks in 1919. Here he comments on the introduction of the New Economic Policy in 1921.

At the end of spring 1921, Lenin defined what the New Economic Policy (NEP) would be. It was really a partial restoration of capitalism and the establishment of a dictatorship within the Bolshevik party. Within a few months, the NEP was already producing marvellous results. From one week to the next, famine and speculation were decreasing noticeably. Restaurants were opening once again and, wonder of wonders, pastries that were actually edible were on sale for a ruble each. People were talking about the return of capitalism and prosperity.

On the other hand, there was widespread confusion among ordinary Bolshevik party members. For what did we fight, spill so much blood and agree to so many sacrifices, they asked bitterly. The market was coming back and these Bolshevik members felt that capitalism, their defeated enemy, was now making a come-back.

20

Personally, I was less pessimistic than many Bolsheviks. I was glad that the economic changes of the NEP had taken place. However, the reactionary side of the NEP – the complete removal of every trace of democracy – worried and distressed me. The Bolshevik regime, through its intolerance and its imposition of an absolute monopoly of power, was struggling in its work and spreading a sort of general paralysis throughout the country.
