Sources for use with Section A.

Answer the questions in Section A on the option for which you have been prepared.

Option 2C.1: France in revolution, 1774–99

Source for use with Question 1(a).

Source 1: From a private letter written in 1776 by the Comte de Mercy-Argenteau to Maria Theresa, Empress of Austria and mother of Marie Antoinette. Mercy-Argenteau was the Austrian ambassador to France and acted as Marie Antoinette's mentor. Here, he comments on the French Queen.

Among the public rumours that damage the reputation of the Queen of France, one appears more dangerous and unpleasant than the rest. People complain quite openly that the Queen is extravagant and encourages extravagance.

The public are alarmed by Her Majesty's expenditure at the Trianon*. By her order the gardens have been completely changed, which cost at least 150,000 livres. The Queen has had a theatre built at the Trianon but she has presented only one play there, followed by a supper. This entertainment was very expensive. 5

The Queen's allowance has been doubled, yet she has run up debts. The Queen has bought many diamonds, and her card-playing has become very costly. These causes of the Queen's debts have also provoked outcries and complaints. 10

* the Trianon – a small château given to Marie Antoinette by Louis XVI in 1774

Source for use with Question 1(b).

Source 2: From a speech made by Henri Grégoire to the National Assembly, 15 July 1791. Grégoire was a republican clergyman who became a radical Jacobin. Here, he considers the King's flight to Varennes.

Gentlemen, on this matter, I will speak according to my conscience.

King Louis XVI, our most important public servant, abandons his post. He travels with a false passport. The King had written to foreign powers stating that his most dangerous enemies were those who were trying to spread doubts and suspicions about the intentions of the monarch. He then proceeds to break his word. He flees Paris, leaving behind a written declaration for the French people, which, if not criminal in content, is, at the very least, contrary to the principles of our liberty. He must have been aware that his flight to Varennes exposed the nation to the dangers of civil war. 15 20

And finally, if we consider the argument that he wished only to go to Montmédy*, I say this: if he simply wanted to make peaceful observations to the National Assembly about its decrees, it was pointless to flee from the capital. If, on the other hand, he wanted to support his claims with military force, then the King's flight was a conspiracy against liberty. 25

* Montmédy – a pro-monarchy fortress town in north-eastern France

Option 2C.2: Russia in revolution, 1894–1924

Source for use with Question 2(a).

Source 3: From the Act of Abdication of Tsar Nicholas II, March 1917.

By the Grace of God, I, Nicholas, Emperor of Russia, make known to all My faithful subjects:

In this terrible struggle against the foreign enemy, God has confronted Russia with a new and formidable test. Troubles at home endanger a Russian victory in this hard-fought war. Russia's future, the honour of Our heroic army and the welfare of the people demand the war should be carried to a victorious conclusion at any price. 5

In these decisive days, I should follow the voice of My conscience by enabling the closest co-operation of My people and the organisation of all their resources for the speedy achievement of victory. 10

For these reasons, in agreement with the дума, I think it My duty to abdicate the Crown and give up supreme power.

Source for use with Question 2(b).

Source 4: From General William S. Graves, America's Siberian Adventure 1918–20, published 1931. Graves commanded the American interventionist forces that supported the Whites in Siberia during the Russian Civil War. Here, he reflects on Admiral Kolchak and the White forces in Siberia.

There was never enough popular support behind Kolchak in Eastern Siberia for him to have lasted one month if all Allied support had been removed. Kolchak was suspected of being pro-Tsarist. Certainly, he did not favour democracy. He hated, and in return was hated by, the Socialist Revolutionaries who at that time were by far the largest political group in Siberia. From the start, his regime was distrusted and detested by everyone except the military group who created it. The common people were the most hostile and they viewed the White dictatorship with a mistrust and alarm that grew in intensity. 15 20

Under this White dictatorship, all the old vices of the Tsarist regime came back. Floggings and shootings again became the basis of army organisation. The officers gambled, drank, and stole military supplies, while the men starved. Representatives of workers were no longer admitted to official receptions, and the Whites' agrarian policy plainly showed that the clock had been turned back to pre-revolutionary times. Meanwhile a White Terror began that was far worse than anything perpetrated by the Reds. Not merely those suspected of being Bolsheviks, but also Socialists of any kind, and Liberals and Democrats, were slaughtered in their thousands. 25
