Sources for use with Section A.

Answer the questions in Section A on the option for which you have been prepared.

Option 2D.1: The unification of Italy, c1830–70

Source for use with Question 1(a).

Source 1: From the memoirs of Sir Rodney Mundy, published 1863 and based on his daily journal. Mundy was commander of the British naval force sent to southern Italy in the years 1860–61. Here Mundy is recounting his last conversation with Garibaldi before Garibaldi retired to the island of Caprera in November 1860.

Garibaldi said, 'I shall be in action again! Next year, we must have a million men ready to fight. The work of the rebirth of my country must be completed. I shall never rest satisfied until freedom from foreign rule has been achieved throughout the whole of Italy. Rome and Venice are not French or Austrian cities. They are Italian cities. They belong to Italy alone.'

5

Garibaldi stated that the French Emperor was the main enemy of Italy. Garibaldi believed that the one true Italian capital could only be freed if the whole nation rose up. He declared, however, he could never work to achieve this with an Italian minister who had agreed to the humiliation of Italy by France, no matter how great that minister was.

10

Source for use with Question 1(b).

Source 2: From a report written by the Prime Minister of the government of Naples in exile, July 1863. The report was produced in Rome where the Neapolitan king and his government had fled after the revolution led by Garibaldi in 1860.

Piedmontese troops control southern Italy, but only thanks to a brutal enforcement of military law. The Neapolitans are treated as slaves who have revolted against their masters. Under the old regime, before 1860, Naples could be placed under emergency regulations after an insurrection. However, these regulations could only be enforced for three days, with continued freedom of the press and no arrests. The Piedmontese, on the other hand, have kept Naples under military control for six months.

15

The Italian government have announced a war of extermination. Those who will not submit to their demands are simply exterminated. Pardons have been promised to every brigand who gives himself up. But many of those who surrender are being shot immediately. Sometimes we have seen the slaughter of forty or fifty prisoners at once. Meanwhile, a Piedmontese minister states publicly that everything the government is doing upholds the constitution.

20

The official newspaper at Naples has announced that Piedmontese troops entered a village and killed 'forty brigands'. The truth is that these were just poor innocent villagers who had fled in fear and then returned home, believing local officials had offered them safe return.

25

Is this kind of terrorism really necessary to make Italian unity?

Option 2D.2: The unification of Germany, c1840–71

Source for use with Question 2(a).

Source 3: From the founding statement and declaration of principles of the Nationalverein, published 14 August 1859.

1. We believe that the present international political situation brings great dangers for the independence of our German fatherland. These dangers have been increased, rather than decreased, by the peace concluded between Austria and France.
2. These dangers have their ultimate cause in the defective common constitution of the German Confederation. 5
3. It is necessary that the German federal Diet be replaced by a strong, stable, and permanent central government of Germany, and with a German national assembly.
4. At present, the most effective steps for the achievement of this objective can only come from Prussia. We should therefore strive to ensure that Prussia takes the initiative in this matter. 10

Source for use with Question 2(b).

Source 4: From a confidential memorandum written by Count von Rechberg, Austrian Foreign Minister, to the Emperor Franz Joseph of Austria, May 1864. The information provided was intended to help the Emperor to make a decision on the reduction of Austrian trade tariffs.

Prussia, despite having friendly political relations with Austria, has deliberately continued to make it impossible to create a joint German-Austrian Customs Union. According to the treaty of February 1853, this Union was to be the common aim of both Austria and Prussia. However, Prussia has been independently pursuing its own trade policies with some success. The recent achievement of the Franco-Prussian trade agreement has clearly won influence for Prussia over many of the other German states. The Prussian government has an uncompromising determination to use the expansion of the Zollverein as the foundation for Prussian power in Germany. Prussia thoroughly exploits this power against Austria. 15 20

Austrian trade tariffs have recently been proposed to the German states most friendly to us. These tariffs are not sufficiently low enough for these German states to remove their support for the Franco-Prussian trade agreement. Only a further considerable reduction in customs duties will persuade them that a German-Austrian Customs Union will be of economic benefit to all of Germany. We need to be able to prove that Prussia is acting purely for its own political motives. Prussia is attempting, at all costs, to exclude Austria from participation in the Zollverein and from leadership of the economic interests of Germany. 25 30
