

Oxford Cambridge and RSA

Friday 10 June 2022 – Morning

A Level History A

Y111/01 Liberals, Conservatives and the Rise of Labour
1846–1918

Time allowed: 1 hour 30 minutes

You must have:

- the OCR 12-page Answer Booklet

INSTRUCTIONS

- Use black ink.
- Write your answer to each question in the Answer Booklet. The question numbers must be clearly shown.
- Fill in the boxes on the front of the Answer Booklet.
- Answer Question 1 in Section A. Answer either Question 2 or Question 3 in Section B.

INFORMATION

- The total mark for this paper is 50.
- The marks for each question are shown in brackets [].
- Quality of extended response will be assessed in questions marked with an asterisk (*).
- This document has 4 pages.

ADVICE

- Read each question carefully before you start your answer.

SECTION AEngland and a New Century c.1900–1918

Study the four sources and then answer Question 1.

- 1 Using these four sources in their historical context, assess how far they support the view that low wages were the main cause of the industrial unrest in the years from 1910 to 1914. [30]

Source A: A government ministry presents its analysis of the causes of industrial disputes.

The majority of disputes that occur arise principally about inadequate wages. In the last year, this was the case in 576 of the total of 903 disputes. The assertion and defence of trade union principles, such as demands by workpeople for recognition of their trade union or refusals to work with non-unionists, have been frequent causes of trade disputes for many years past, but usually such disputes have been small in magnitude. In 1911, however, these causes were mainly responsible for two of the largest disputes of the year – the general railway strike and the lock-out in the cotton weaving industry of North and North-East Lancashire.

The Board of Trade, Report on Strikes and Lockouts, 1911Source B: A Labour MP contributes to the debate in the House of Commons on a motion for an investigation into the causes of industrial unrest.

Ten years ago, one third of the population were living either in poverty or on the poverty line. Every evil that existed then has been made worse since. In the first ten years of this century the cost of living, according to the Board of Trade figures, has increased by 12.5% but wages by only 1%. The workers have been crying out for a fuller share of life but while there has been this increase in the demand, there has been a lessening of the power to satisfy the demand. Various reforms, such as pensions and insurance, have tinkered with effects without touching causes.

Keir Hardie, speech, 8 May 1912Source C: A prominent socialist writer and observer of society expresses his views on the nature of the problem underlying the unrest of the time.

The worker is beginning to strike for unprecedented ends – against the system, against the fundamental conditions of labour, to strike for no defined ends at all. The temper of labour has changed. The young workman has put the whole social system on trial. He criticises the good intentions of the whole system of governing and influential people. These are the new conditions, and these middle-aged and elderly gentlemen who are dealing with the crisis in the belief that their vast experience of earlier Labour questions will help them do so are bringing the gunpowder of misunderstanding to the revolutionary fort.

H. G. Wells, What the Worker Wants, 1912

Source D: The editor of a publication about labour relations summarises the views of several writers included in the book.

At the same time that syndicalism* came to be discussed, a revival of trade union activity took place, and on such a scale that it seemed to the present writers that, at last, the trade unions were now finally determined to form a permanent element in society. In short, every speculation concerning the future of industry was henceforward bound to take into account the trade unions as well as the state. In our view, every strike should specifically aim to achieve some form of partnership in industry by the unions and not by the individual members.

* syndicalism – a movement for transferring the ownership and control of the means of production and distribution to workers' unions

A. R. Orage, National Guilds, 1914

4

SECTION BLiberals, Conservatives and the Rise of Labour 1846–1902Answer ONE question.

- 2* 'The main impact of foreign affairs on Britain during the period from 1848 to 1866 was the emergence of the Liberal party.' How far do you agree? [20]
- 3* 'Division in the Liberal Party was the main reason for the failure of Gladstone to achieve Home Rule for Ireland.' How far do you agree? [20]

END OF QUESTION PAPER

OCR

Oxford Cambridge and RSA

Copyright Information

OCR is committed to seeking permission to reproduce all third-party content that it uses in its assessment materials. OCR has attempted to identify and contact all copyright holders whose work is used in this paper. To avoid the issue of disclosure of answer-related information to candidates, all copyright acknowledgements are reproduced in the OCR Copyright Acknowledgements Booklet. This is produced for each series of examinations and is freely available to download from our public website (www.ocr.org.uk) after the live examination series. If OCR has unwittingly failed to correctly acknowledge or clear any third-party content in this assessment material, OCR will be happy to correct its mistake at the earliest possible opportunity.

For queries or further information please contact The OCR Copyright Team, The Triangle Building, Shaftesbury Road, Cambridge CB2 8EA.

OCR is part of Cambridge University Press & Assessment, which is itself a department of the University of Cambridge.