Source A Selected articles from the Concordat signed between Napoleon and Pope Pius VII (15 July 1801)

The government of the Republic acknowledges that the Catholic religion, Apostolic and Roman, is the religion of the great majority of French citizens. His Holiness also acknowledges that the religion has derived, and is likely to derive, the greatest advantage from the establishment of the Catholic faith in France, and from the particular profession of it by the consuls of the Republic. They therefore, after this mutual acknowledgment, made as well for the interest of religion as for the support of the internal tranquillity of their respective states, have agreed as follows:

Article I. The Catholic religion, Apostolic and Roman, shall be freely exercised in France. Its worship shall be public, but in conformity to such regulations of police as government shall judge necessary for the public tranquillity.

Article II. There shall be made by the Holy See, in concert with the government, a new division of French dioceses.

Source B Napoleon Bonaparte in a private letter to his brother Jerome, King of Westphalia (15 November 1807)

You will find enclosed the Constitution for your kingdom. This Constitution contains the conditions by which I renounce all rights of conquest and all rights acquired over your kingdom. You must observe it faithfully. The happiness of your people is important to me, not only because of the influence it can have on your reputation and mine, but also from the point of view of the general system of Europe. Refuse to listen to those who tell you that your people, accustomed to servitude, will receive the benefits you bring them with ingratitude. They are more enlightened in the Kingdom of Westphalia than some would have you believe; your throne will only become truly established through the confidence and affection of the people. What the people of Germany impatiently desire is that men who are not nobles but who have talent will have an equal claim to your consideration and to employment; they also want the total abolition of servitude and all intermediate links between the sovereign and the lowest class of people. The benefits of the Code Napoleon, public trials, the introduction of juries, will be the distinctive characteristic of your monarchy.
