

Additional Materials: Answer Booklet/Paper

The number of marks is given in brackets [] at the end of each question or part question.

Option A: 19th Century topicHOW FAR WAS THE KAISER TO BLAME FOR THE FIRST WORLD WAR?

Study the Background Information and the sources carefully, and then answer all the questions.

Background Information

In 1890 the new Kaiser of Germany, Wilhelm II, dismissed Bismarck as Chancellor. Many historians argue that the Kaiser encouraged a new aggressive foreign policy often called 'World Policy' or 'Weltpolitik'. It is sometimes claimed that the resulting German aggression both inside and outside Europe was a significant factor in causing the First World War. However, other historians have argued that other countries such as Britain and Russia should take a major part of the blame.

How far should the Kaiser take personal responsibility for causing the First World War?

SOURCE A

After 1890 German energies were turned outwards against foreign powers. Every German gain, every advance of German exports, was transformed into a grievance that it was not more; and the enormous development of German industry served to demonstrate the denial of Germany's 'place in the sun'. Germany cried out for the possessions of others; convinced that if she could but ruin and destroy her neighbours she would be at last stable and contented. But there was no proper Plan. The government would pick up one scheme and then another, dropping them when they seemed to threaten a serious conflict.

Germany renewed in 1898 its colonial ambitions in Africa and then, fearing to break with England, half dropped them; so it seized in 1897 a concession in China and then feared to play a serious part as a Far Eastern Power; and – most contradictory of all – it prompted and supported the project for a German railway across Turkey, yet shrank from the breach with Russia that this railway implied.

The project of a huge German navy was the perfect expression of the spirit which made up the Germany of Wilhelm II and Bülow, the Germany of limitless ambition and contradiction. The great navy had no defensive purpose. It was not designed to defend Germany's (worthless) colonial empire. The navy was purely a weapon of offence; and it is not surprising that the British drew the conclusion that the offence could be directed only against them. But this threat to England was not intended. It is difficult to find in the ceaseless outpouring of propaganda any sensible justification of the great building programme. Its supporters such as Tirpitz fell back on the argument that a great navy was an essential possession of a Great Power. German 'world policy' was a pretence. Germany had no vital interest in China. Her vital interest was security in Europe.

From a history book published in 1945.

SOURCE B

In 1897, Germany embarked on a 'World Policy' (Weltpolitik). Weltpolitik did not have a very precise meaning. In 1897 the Kaiser made two important changes in his ministers. Bülow was appointed to the foreign ministry and Admiral von Tirpitz to head the navy office. The latter signified that Germany was to begin the construction of a powerful battle fleet to challenge Britain's naval supremacy. Bülow's role was to improve Germany's position on the world stage and satisfy the German people's craving for 'a place in the sun'. The Kaiser said in 1898, 'Germany has great tasks to accomplish outside the narrow boundaries of old Europe.' What these 'great tasks' were is not very obvious. As Germany's army commander remarked around this time: 'We are supposed to pursue Weltpolitik. If only we knew what it was supposed to mean.' Behind the pursuit of Weltpolitik there lay a vague longing to be a World Power.

By the end of 1904, few of the aims of German diplomacy had been achieved. Weltpolitik had added little to Germany's overseas empire. Admittedly the navy programme was proving very popular in Germany; but the British Admiralty feared that the German fleet was designed for a possible conflict with Britain. To meet the challenge, Britain took counter-measures.

From a history book published in 2001.

SOURCE C

A British cartoon published in October 1905.

SOURCE D

Now we know where our enemy stands. Like a flash of lightning in the night, these events have shown the German people where its enemy is. The German people now knows when it seeks its place in the sun, when it seeks the place it deserves, that Britain thinks it can decide the matter. When the hour of decision comes we are prepared for sacrifices, both of blood and of wealth.

*From a speech by a politician in the German parliament in November 1911.
The speech was met with great applause.*

SOURCE E

Great Britain as a world power stands and falls with her strength at sea. If we ourselves were responsible for the safeguarding of an empire like that of Great Britain, we should strive to maintain our sea-power in the same way. I am of the opinion that the solidarity of the Entente policy varies depending on England's relations with Germany. To guard her security and influence in Europe, England will continue to insist on a balance of power and will hold a protecting hand over France. We are respected here, we are highly thought of, and from this feeling comes England's wish to hem us in. This is quite a different thing from a wish to go to war with us. Our common interests are too great, our economic ties too close for that. And the people of Great Britain have grown too comfort-loving to want a war.

From a letter by the German ambassador in London to Bethmann Hollweg, the German Chancellor, December 1912.

SOURCE F

Content removed due to copyright restrictions.

A British cartoon published in May 1916. The caption reads: 'The German Monster: "Heaven knows that I had to do this in self-defence. It was forced upon me." (According to the Imperial Chancellor's latest speech Germany is the deeply angered victim of British militarism).'

SOURCE G

Now or never

Who authorized him to act that way? That is very stupid! It is none of his business, as it is solely the affair of Austria, what she plans to do in this case. Later, if plans go wrong, it will be said that Germany did not want it! Let Tschirschky drop this nonsense. The Serbs must be disposed of, and soon!

I frequently hear expressed here the wish that at last a final and fundamental reckoning should be had with the Serbs. Serbs should first be presented with a number of demands, and in case they should not accept these, energetic measures should be taken. I take every opportunity of every such occasion to advise quietly but very seriously against hasty action. First of all, the Austrian government must make sure what they want to do. Then the chances of every kind of action should be carefully weighed, and it should be kept in mind that Austria-Hungary does not stand alone in the world, that it is her duty to think not only of her allies, but to take into consideration the entire European situation, and especially to bear in mind the attitude of Italy and Roumania on all questions that concern Serbia.

*A report by Tschirschky, the German Ambassador in Austria, to the Kaiser, 30 July 1914.
The notes on the left were added by the Kaiser.*

SOURCE H

I began to mediate between your government and the Austro-Hungarian government. While this action was proceeding, your troops were mobilised on my eastern frontier. Responsibility for the safety of my empire forces preventative measures of defence upon me. The responsibility for the disaster now threatening the whole civilised world will not be placed on me. In this moment it still lies in your power to avert it. Nobody is threatening the honour or power of Russia.

From a letter by Kaiser Wilhelm II to Tsar Nicholas II of Russia, 31 July 1914.

SOURCE I

A decisive statement on the part of the British government of its solidarity with France had in 1911 been sufficient to dispel the gathering storm clouds. I am convinced now that had the British government sided with Russia and France on the Serbian question from the first, Germany would not have encouraged Austria in its policy of aggression but would, on the contrary, have advised caution and moderation.

From the memoirs of Serge Sazonov written in 1928. Sazonov was the member of the Russian government in charge of foreign policy in 1914.

Now answer all the following questions. You may use any of the sources to help you answer the questions, in addition to those sources which you are told to use. In answering the questions you should use your knowledge of the topic to help you interpret and evaluate the sources.

1 Study Sources A and B.

How far do these two sources agree? Explain your answer using details of the sources. [7]

2 Study Source C.

Why was this cartoon published in 1905? Explain your answer using details of the source and your knowledge. [8]

3 Study Sources D and E.

Does Source D prove that Source E was wrong? Explain your answer using details of the sources and your knowledge. [7]

4 Study Source F.

What is the message of this cartoon? Explain your answer using details of the source and your knowledge. [8]

5 Study Sources G and H.

Was the Kaiser lying in Source H? Explain your answer using details of the sources and your knowledge. [8]

6 Study all the sources.

How far do these sources provide convincing evidence that the Kaiser was personally to blame for the First World War? Use the sources to explain your answer. [12]

Option B: 20th Century topicDID THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS HAVE A CHANCE OF SUCCEEDING?

Study the Background Information and the sources carefully, and then answer all the questions.

Background Information

The last of President Wilson's Fourteen Points was that 'a general association of nations' should be set up to ensure the 'political independence and territorial integrity of great and small nations alike'. In 1920 the League of Nations was established. Its members agreed to protect all members against aggression and to try and resolve disputes peacefully through the League. During the 1920s, the League had to deal with several disputes, including ones over the Åland Islands and Bulgaria. However, there were other disputes such as the crisis in 1923 over Corfu where the League was ineffective and in the 1930s the League struggled to deal with Japan's aggression in Manchuria and Italy's invasion of Abyssinia.

By the late 1930s it was clear that the League had failed. Did it ever have a chance of succeeding or was it doomed from the start?

SOURCE A

If for idealists the League offered the chance of a new beginning, for the hard-headed French the League's chief value lay not in its defence of a new international morality but in its capacity to defend the Versailles settlement against revision. French interests demanded a League with teeth. They made several attempts to create a military force at the League's disposal, but failed to persuade the British. When Wilson failed to push American membership of the League through Congress, much of the League's deterrent value slipped away.

The League was certainly not unimportant; it provided an international forum for discussion, it was a source of influence, and helped tackle the kinds of problems – like the refugee crisis – where a coordinated international response was desirable. Even though it had very limited powers to intervene in the internal affairs of member states, it could help publicise abuses of minority groups and expose governments to the pressure of world opinion.

Nevertheless, its influence depended on its members' willingness to work through it. They were not bound by it, and could conduct diplomacy through other channels. Great Power politics was far from dead. Other more traditional, diplomatic forums remained important: the Conference of Ambassadors was chosen in preference to the League to settle crises in 1923 over Corfu and Vilna.

Between 1934 and 1936 the European balance swung away from France and Britain. The British could not afford military commitments in Europe and government policy was affected by pacifism. As for the French, they had no offensive plans where Germany was concerned. These developments doomed the League of Nations.

From a history book published in 1998.

SOURCE B

Despite its poor historical reputation the League should not be dismissed as a complete failure. Of sixty-six international disputes it had to deal with, it successfully resolved thirty-five and quite sensibly passed back twenty to the channels of traditional diplomacy. It failed to resolve just eleven conflicts.

After the First World War Great Britain and France still laid down the law to all Europe. However, everything was soon overtaken in importance by the new institution which came out of the peace-conference: the League of Nations. It is true that there was a deep, underlying divergence between Britain and France as to the nature of the League. The French wanted the League to develop into a system of security directed against Germany; the British regarded it as a system of conciliation which would include Germany. The British and French governments were both too distracted by difficulties, domestic and foreign, to have a clear and consistent policy.

When Abyssinia was attacked in October 1935, the members of the League responded. The impact of the League's sanctions was weakened by Germany and the United States, the two Great Powers outside the League. But this was not serious. The real weakness was within the League. France applied sanctions but assured Mussolini that Italy's oil supplies would not be interfered with. On 1 May 1936, the Emperor Haile Selassie left Abyssinia. A week later Mussolini proclaimed the foundation of a new Roman empire. This was a serious blow to the League. Fifty-two nations had combined to resist aggression; all they had accomplished was that Haile Selassie lost all his country instead of only half.

The real death of the League was in December 1935, not in 1939 or 1945. One day it was a powerful body imposing sanctions, seemingly more effective than even before; the next day it was an empty sham. What killed the League was the publication of the Hoare-Laval plan.

From a history book published in 1961.

SOURCE C

The League of Nations is our best hope, but the diplomats are all against it, regarding it as a toy to amuse and mislead the public, but intending all the time to carry on their old game just as before.

Jan Smuts speaking at Versailles in 1919. Smuts served in the British War Cabinet in the First World War and represented South Africa at the peace talks at Versailles. In 1919 he became Prime Minister of South Africa.

SOURCE D

For the first time in history mankind is to be drawn together for the purpose of defending the rights and improving the conditions of working people – men, women and children – all over the world. Such a thing as that was never dreamed of before, and what you are asked to decide in discussing the League of Nations is the matter of seeing that this thing is not interfered with. There is no other way to do it than by a universal league of nations, and what is proposed is a universal league of nations.

But the things prescribed in this treaty will not be fully carried out if any one of the great influences that brought that result about is withheld. Every great fighting nation in the world is on the list of those who are to constitute the League of Nations. I say every great nation, because America is going to be included among them, and the only choice, my fellow citizens, is whether we will go in now or come in later with Germany; whether we will go in as founders of this covenant of freedom or go in as those who are admitted after they have made a mistake and repented.

From a speech by President Woodrow Wilson soon after he returned to the USA, September 1919.

SOURCE E

A British cartoon published in September 1923.

SOURCE F

A British cartoon published in 1933.

SOURCE G

Can the League survive the failure of sanctions to rescue Abyssinia? Can it ever impose sanctions again? Probably there has never been such a clear-cut case for sanctions. As the League has failed in this case, there can probably be no confidence that it can succeed again in the future.

Anthony Eden, a leading member of the British government, speaking to the British Cabinet, May 1936. The Cabinet included the most important members of the British government.

SOURCE H

The facts should be squarely faced. The course of military events and the local situation in Abyssinia have brought us to a point at which the sanctions at present in force are incapable of reversing the order of events in that country. In our view only military action could do this now. I cannot believe that, in present world conditions, such military action could be considered a possibility. So far as the British government is concerned, our policy has been based on the principles for which the League stands.

Anthony Eden responding to Emperor Haile Selassie's speech to the League of Nations in June 1936.

SOURCE I

Wilson made a peace which created a world of nations, but he formed a League which relied on 'moral persuasion' and 'collective security'. The League never had any chance of success. As soon as any nation found that its national self-interest was threatened, the League could be ignored.

From a history book published in 2004.

Now answer all the following questions. You may use any of the sources to help you answer the questions, in addition to those sources which you are told to use. In answering the questions you should use your knowledge of the topic to help you interpret and evaluate the sources.

1 Study Sources A and B.

How far do these two sources agree? Explain your answer using details of the sources. [7]

2 Study Sources C and D.

How far does Source D make you surprised by Source C? Explain your answer using details of the sources and your knowledge. [8]

3 Study Source E.

What is the message of this source? Explain your answer using details of the source and your knowledge. [8]

4 Study Source F.

Why was this source published in 1933? Explain your answer using details of the source and your knowledge. [8]

5 Study Sources G and H.

Does Source G mean that Eden was lying in Source H? Explain your answer using details of the sources and your knowledge. [7]

6 Study all the sources.

How far do these sources provide convincing evidence that the League never had a chance of succeeding? Use the sources to explain your answer. [12]

BLANK PAGE

Copyright Acknowledgements:

Option A Source A	© A J P Taylor; The Course of German History ; Hamish Hamilton; 1945.
Option A Source B	© John Lowe & Robert Pearce; Rivalry and Accord: International Relations 1870-1914 ; Hodder Murray; 2001.
Option A Source C	© Mark Bryant; World War I in Cartoons ; Grub Street Publications; 2009.
Option A Source D	© J A Harkness, H McMillan & D Moore; Cooperation and Conflict: International Relations ; Hodder & Stoughton; 1991.
Option A Sources E, F, G & H	© Gordon Martel; Origins of the First World War ; Longman; 2003.
Option A Source I	© Imanuel Geiss; The Outbreak of the First World War: Selected Documents ; Batsford; 1967.
Option B Source A	© Mark Mazower; Dark Continent: Europe's Twentieth Century ; Penguin Press; 1998.
Option B Sources C & H	© Philip Sauvain; Key Themes of the Twentieth Century ; Stanley Thornes; 1996.
Option B Source D	© http://www.spartacus.schoolnet.co.uk
Option B Sources E & F	© The British Cartoon Archive, University of Kent.
Option B Source G	© Ben Walsh; Modern World History ; John Murray; 1996.

Permission to reproduce items where third-party owned material protected by copyright is included has been sought and cleared where possible. Every reasonable effort has been made by the publisher (UCLES) to trace copyright holders, but if any items requiring clearance have unwittingly been included, the publisher will be pleased to make amends at the earliest possible opportunity.

University of Cambridge International Examinations is part of the Cambridge Assessment Group. Cambridge Assessment is the brand name of University of Cambridge Local Examinations Syndicate (UCLES), which is itself a department of the University of Cambridge.