READ THESE INSTRUCTIONS FIRST

An answer booklet is provided inside this question paper. You should follow the instructions on the front cover of the answer booklet. If you need additional answer paper ask the invigilator for a continuation booklet.

This paper has two options.

Choose one option, and answer all of the questions on that topic.

Option A: 19th Century topic [p2–p7]

Option B: 20th Century topic [p8–p14]

The number of marks is given in brackets [] at the end of each question or part question.

This document consists of 14 printed pages, 2 blank pages and 1 insert.

Option A: 19th Century topicWAS THE AMERICAN CIVIL WAR FOUGHT OVER SLAVERY?

Study the Background Information and the sources carefully, and then answer all the questions.

Background Information

The concern of northerners about slavery increased dramatically in the 1850s. Developments such as the publication of Uncle Tom's Cabin in 1852 and the Kansas-Nebraska Act of 1854 contributed to their fears. However, southerners were just as worried. They saw the economic and political power of the North as a threat to the rights and independence of southern states, especially their right to own slaves. After Lincoln's election as president in 1860 southern states began to secede from the Union and, in April 1861, the first shots of the Civil War were fired.

Was the American Civil War fought over slavery, the rights of the South or the preservation of the Union?

SOURCE A

The Confederate president on 12 April ordered the bombardment of Fort Sumter. Civil War had begun. With the fort's surrender, Lincoln declared that rebellion existed in the seceded states. To suppress it he called for the loyal states to supply 75 000 militia volunteers, ordered an expansion of the regular army, proclaimed a blockade of the southern coast and authorised the expenditure of millions of dollars for military purposes. By the end of May four more slave states seceded, rather than take part in the coercion of their southern brothers.

Whether Lincoln craftily manoeuvred the South into firing the first shot or simply took a calculated risk of war, creating a situation that placed the onus of striking the first blow on Jefferson Davis rather than himself, the result galvanised public opinion in the North. The attack on Fort Sumter clarified in northern minds the direct opposition between free and slave societies that abolitionists and many Republicans had long insisted on. In Quincy, Illinois, a mass meeting of Democrats and Republicans unanimously adopted resolutions pledging 'support' to the government in its efforts for 'suppression of rebellion, preservation of the Union, punishment of treason'.

In none of his proclamations did Lincoln mention the word 'slavery' or indicate that military efforts had any purpose other than to suppress rebellion that prevented the upholding of the laws. In his call for 75 000 militiamen he stated that the 'utmost care' would be taken to avoid any interference with property in the seceded states. He even stopped his generals issuing local emancipation decrees in the early months of the war.

Lincoln believed that making slavery a target of the war effort would drive all the states of the Upper South to secede and shatter northern unity. When an abolitionist told his audience in Wayland, Massachusetts, that slaves should be allowed 'to fight on our side', his audience responded that the war was about national unity, 'and they wouldn't hear a word about those blacks'. As so often Lincoln sought the lowest common factor in public opinion – in this case a war to preserve the Union.

SOURCE B

Some historians think that Lincoln deliberately manoeuvred the Confederacy into firing the first shots. Others believe that his main concern in attempting to resupply Fort Sumter was to try to give himself more time. In reality, it seems likely that Lincoln was trying to keep as many options open as possible. He hoped to preserve peace, but was willing to risk war.

At 4.30 am on 12 April 1861, the opening shots of the Civil War were fired. After the surrender of Fort Sumter, Lincoln called upon the state militia to muster 70 000 men. This call for troops prompted the secession of Virginia, North Carolina, Arkansas and Tennessee.

Secession did not necessarily mean war. Lincoln's government could have allowed the southern states to depart in peace. But Lincoln and the Republicans were committed to preventing slavery expansion. Lincoln also laid great emphasis on the Union, which was evoked almost as a religious concept. Lincoln called the Union 'the last, best hope of mankind'. Without Union, he believed, American freedom would be destroyed. Furthermore, he and many other Unionists thought that secession was a bluff, and that once the South saw it could not prevail, it would return to the Union.

However, it was slavery which had led to the divide between North and South. Differences arising from the slavery issue led to the secession of the Southern states. The Confederacy was ready to fight to the death for states' rights and, in particular, the right to preserve slavery. Although few northerners were willing to fight to free the slave, most were prepared to fight to save the Union. The slave issue meant they had to fight to save the Union.

I am naturally anti-slavery. If slavery is not wrong, nothing is wrong. Yet I have never understood that the presidency conferred on me an unrestricted right to act officially on this feeling. It was in the oath I took that I would preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States.

For the statesmen to permit a settlement of the present war between slavery and freedom, which will leave untouched and undestroyed the relation of master and slave, would be a great crime. It would also be a great mistake, the bitter fruit of which would poison the life blood of unborn generations. It is the critical moment for us. I urge all men, and especially the Government, to the abolition of slavery. Not a slave should be left a slave in the returning footprints of the American army sent to put down this slaveholding rebellion.

Option B: 20th Century topicHOW FAR DID THE SUPERPOWERS ACT RESPONSIBLY OVER CUBA?

Study the Background Information and the sources carefully, and then answer all the questions.

Background Information

Ever since the Cuban Revolution in 1959 when Castro took over control of Cuba and began to turn the country towards communism and the Soviet Union, Cuba had been a concern for the United States and a source of tension with the Soviet Union. Even after supporting the failed invasion in 1961 by Cuban exiles, the United States continued to plan an economic blockade of Cuba and another invasion. Meanwhile, the Soviet Union poured economic help, troops and armaments into Cuba. It claimed this was to defend Cuba.

On the morning of Sunday 14 October 1962, a U-2 spy plane photographed Soviet missile sites under construction in Cuba. For two weeks, until the crisis ended on 28 October, many feared that the world was on the brink of a nuclear war.

Did the actions of America and Russia during the crisis make the situation worse or did they act in a sensible manner? How reasonably did the superpowers act over Cuba?

SOURCE A

Within the past week, unmistakable evidence has established the fact that a series of offensive missile sites is now in preparation on Cuba. The purpose of these bases can be none other than to provide a nuclear strike capability against the Western Hemisphere. Turning Cuba into an important strategic base is an open threat to the peace and security of the Americas. This action contradicts the repeated promises of Soviet spokesmen that the arms build-up in Cuba would be defensive. Our objective must be to prevent the use of these missiles against this or any other country, and to secure their withdrawal from the Western Hemisphere. Only last Thursday the Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko told me that Soviet assistance to Cuba was, and I quote, 'only for the purpose of contributing to the defence of Cuba'.

Acting in our own defence and of the entire Western world, I have directed that a strict quarantine on all offensive military equipment under shipment to Cuba be started. All ships, if found to contain cargoes of offensive weapons, will be turned back.

Our goal is both peace and freedom around the world.

From a speech on television to the American people by President Kennedy, 22 October 1962.

SOURCE B

The United States demands that military equipment which Cuba needs for self-defence should be removed from Cuban territory. The USSR is in favour of all troops being withdrawn from foreign territories. However, the United States has its armed forces and armaments scattered throughout the world. US spokesmen are continually boasting that American planes can attack the Soviet Union at any time. Peace-loving states cannot fail to protest against the actions announced by the US President with regard to ships sailing towards Cuba on the high seas. The establishment of an actual blockade of Cuba by the United States is an unheard-of violation of international law. The arrogant actions of American imperialism could lead to consequences disastrous to all mankind.

The Soviet Union calls on all Governments to raise their voices in protest against the aggressive actions of the United States, to denounce these actions, and to bar the way to the unleashing of nuclear war by the US government.

From a statement issued by the Soviet Government, 23 October 1962.

SOURCE C19 October

General LeMay (in charge of the US air force): If we don't do anything to Cuba, then they're going to push on Berlin and push real hard because they have got us on the run. I just don't see any other solution right now. A blockade would be considered by a lot of our friends as being a weak response.

22 October

Nitze (second in charge of the Defence Department of the American Government): A Soviet nuclear attack requires the immediate implementation of the European Defence Plan.

President Kennedy: What's the European Defence Plan?

Nitze: Nuclear War.

From the records of meetings held by President Kennedy to decide how to react to the discovery of the missiles.

SOURCE D

During the crisis President Kennedy spent more time trying to determine the effect of a particular course of action on Khrushchev or the Russians than on anything else. What guided all his decisions was an effort not to disgrace Khrushchev, not to humiliate the Soviet Union. That is why he was reluctant to stop and search a Russian ship; this was why he was opposed to attacking the missile sites. President Kennedy understood that the Soviet Union did not want war, and they understood that we wished to avoid armed conflict.

The climax came when Dobrynin reported that an exhausted Robert Kennedy had said to him, 'The President is in a grave situation and he does not know how to get out of it. We are under very severe stress. In fact we are under pressure from our military to use force against Cuba. We want to ask you to pass President Kennedy's message to Chairman Khrushchev through unofficial channels. President Kennedy implores Chairman Khrushchev to accept his offer and to take into consideration the peculiarities of the American situation. Even though the President is very much against starting a war, an irreversible chain of events could occur against his will. This is why the President is appealing directly to Chairman Khrushchev for help in stopping this conflict. If the situation continues much longer, the President is not sure that the military will not overthrow him and seize power. The American army could get out of control.'

We could see that we had to change our position. We sent the Americans a note saying that we agreed to remove our missiles on the condition that the President gave us his assurance that there would be no invasion of Cuba. Finally Kennedy gave in and agreed to make a statement giving us such an assurance.
