General Marking Guidance

- All candidates must receive the same treatment. Examiners must mark the first candidate in exactly the same way as they mark the last.
- Mark schemes should be applied positively. Candidates must be rewarded for what they have shown they can do rather than penalised for omissions.
- Examiners should mark according to the mark scheme not according to their perception of where the grade boundaries may lie.
- There is no ceiling on achievement. All marks on the mark scheme should be used appropriately.
- All the marks on the mark scheme are designed to be awarded. Examiners should always award full marks if deserved, i.e. if the answer matches the mark scheme. Examiners should also be prepared to award zero marks if the candidate's response is not worthy of credit according to the mark scheme.
- Where some judgement is required, mark schemes will provide the principles by which marks will be awarded and exemplification may be limited.
- When examiners are in doubt regarding the application of the mark scheme to a candidate's response, the team leader must be consulted.
- Crossed out work should be marked UNLESS the candidate has replaced it with an alternative response.

Generic level descriptors for Paper 1

Question (a)

Target: AO4 (6 marks): Analyse and evaluate historical interpretations in the context of historical events studied.

Level	Mark	Descriptor
	0	No rewardable material.

Marking instructions

Answers must be credited according to candidates' deployment of material in relation to the qualities outlined in the generic level descriptors, given at the beginning of this mark scheme.

The indicative content below is not prescriptive and candidates are not required to include all the material which is indicated as relevant. Other relevant material not suggested below must also be credited.

Indicative content

Relevant points which support the statement may include:

- The war increased distrust in the King as Louis had hoped that war would lead to a French defeat and an overthrow of the revolutionary government
- The war increased economic problems and food shortages and made the revolution increasingly extreme and republican
- The increasing threat to Paris from the Austrian and Prussian armies produced a revolutionary fervour that led to an attack on the Tuileries and the suspension of the monarchy
- The arrival of new troops to defend Paris (the Fédérés) increased the revolutionary atmosphere and threatened the status of the constitutional monarchy.

Relevant points which counter the statement may include:

- The attempted flight of the royal family to Varennes in 1791 undermined its position and there were calls for Louis to stand trial
- It was the radical Convention, elected in September 1792, that legally abolished the monarchy
- The growing republicanism in Paris and the political clubs predated the war
- The depression in the luxury trades in Paris produced unemployment and economic misery, which created Sans Culottes radicalism.

Marking instructions

Answers must be credited according to candidates' deployment of material in relation to the qualities outlined in the generic level descriptors, given at the beginning of this mark scheme.

The indicative content below is not prescriptive and candidates are not required to include all the material which is indicated as relevant. Other relevant material not suggested below must also be credited.

Indicative content

Relevant points which support the statement may include:

- The Directory was successful for four years in checking threats posed by the radical left and the royalist right
- The Directory dealt successfully with physical threats from the left and right, e.g. Conspiracy of the Equals
- The Directory crushed the revolt in the Vendée.

Relevant points which counter the statement may include:

- The Directory introduced some successful financial measures, e.g. the restoration of some indirect taxation and a new currency that stabilised the economy
- The Directory prevented government by dictatorship, e.g. members of the Directory would not be able to sit in either of the two large councils and their powers were limited
- The Directory ended mass executions, and measures taken against exiled priests and royalists were relaxed
- The Directory established 196 republics, and the conquered cities and states were required to send huge amounts of money to France, as well as art treasures
- The Directory benefitted from a new constitution for France (The Constitution of Year III), which avoided the extremism of the Jacobins and the Sans Culottes and the conservatism of the royalists and the ancien régime.

Marking instructions

Answers must be credited according to candidates' deployment of material in relation to the qualities outlined in the generic level descriptors, given at the beginning of this mark scheme.

The indicative content below is not prescriptive and candidates are not required to include all the material which is indicated as relevant. Other relevant material not suggested below must also be credited.

Indicative content

Relevant points which support the statement may include:

- Economic problems caused the demand for change, e.g. poor harvests led to food riots in the north and south
- Under-employment in the textiles industries in the north, resulting in workers destroying machinery and demanding political change
- In southern areas, e.g. Calabria, land enclosure had taken common land from the peasantry, which resulted in violence and demand for political change.

Relevant points which counter the statement may include:

- Pope Pius heightened the expectations of liberals for reform by declaring an amnesty for political offences, releasing some 2000 prisoners from papal gaols
- Press censorship by the church was ended, allowing the creation of a freer press that encouraged liberal and radical thought and action
- In Sicily uprisings were a reaction to cholera (which killed 65,000 people) leading to a belief it was in some way connected to Neapolitan misrule and revolutionaries demanding the re-establishment of the 1812 constitution
- In Lombardy Austrian refusal to respond to agitation for political reform led to 'The Five Days of Milan'
- In Naples demonstrations forced Ferdinand to agree to grant a constitution and this raised expectations amongst liberals throughout the Italian peninsula for further political change.

Marking instructions

Answers must be credited according to candidates' deployment of material in relation to the qualities outlined in the generic level descriptors, given at the beginning of this mark scheme.

The indicative content below is not prescriptive and candidates are not required to include all the material which is indicated as relevant. Other relevant material not suggested below must also be credited.

Indicative content

Relevant points which support the statement may include:

- The economic implications of the three 'Ks' reinforced the domestic role of the female within the family
- Educated women lost their professional jobs and their income, e.g. female civil servants and teachers, and this impacted family income
- Interest free loans gave women the opportunity to stay at home and look after children and withdraw from the labour market
- Economic policies led to greater employment and this benefitted family prosperity.

Relevant points which counter the statement may include:

- German girls in the League of German Girls (BDM) were educated in their duty to have Aryan children
- The Nazis moved away from co-educational schools to ensure the different sexes received their appropriate education, e.g. girls undertook needlework and home crafts in order to make them homemakers
- Propaganda campaigns raised the status and profile of the family, e.g. the introduction of the Mother's Cross
- Between 1933–39 divorce laws gave men more grounds on which they could divorce spouses, e.g. racial, and this had a significant impact on the family.

Marking instructions

Answers must be credited according to candidates' deployment of material in relation to the qualities outlined in the generic level descriptors, given at the beginning of this mark scheme.

The indicative content below is not prescriptive and candidates are not required to include all the material which is indicated as relevant. Other relevant material not suggested below must also be credited.

Indicative content

Relevant points which support the statement may include:

- India had poured men and materials into the war effort, and contributed financially through taxation and this led a growing desire for self-governance
- India's war effort led Congress to talk openly about self-government and generated nationalistic feeling
- The war saw the Muslim League and Congress bury their differences as the annulment of the partition of Bengal led the League to believe Britain would not recognise Muslims and this led to growing nationalism
- India's contribution to the war meant the Government of India Act (1919) was a huge disappointment and this led to growing nationalism.

Relevant points which counter the statement may include:

- The Hunter Report (1920) on Amritsar and the vindication of Dyer further fuelled growing Indian nationalism, as the British authorities were seen as complicit
- The Government of India Act created the Dyarchy, which divided power in the provinces and accepted separate electorates, which was a major step in the Muslim cause
- The Rowlatt Acts included trial without jury, censorship and house arrest, and were seen as Britain exerting authority and gave rise to growing nationalism
- The Rowlatt Acts alienated a wide range of Indian public opinion and fuelled growing nationalism.

Marking instructions

Answers must be credited according to candidates' deployment of material in relation to the qualities outlined in the generic level descriptors, given at the beginning of this mark scheme.

The indicative content below is not prescriptive and candidates are not required to include all the material which is indicated as relevant. Other relevant material not suggested below must also be credited.

Indicative content

Relevant points which support the statement may include:

- Gandhi used the Salt Marches to promote the idea of British power and oppression and gain support for the challenge to British rule
- Gandhi organised a second phase of civil disobedience to challenge British rule, e.g. boycotting foreign cloth, non-payment of taxes, which the Raj found difficult to stop without appearing to be oppressive
- Gandhi attended The Second Round Table Conference symbolising national unity and further encouraged support for the ending of British rule.

Relevant points which counter the statement may include:

- Jinnah was responsible for the '14 points', the basis of a new constitution for India, which signposted stepping stones that challenged British rule
- Jinnah worked hard to try to bring Congress and the Muslim League together on an agreed path that challenged British rule
- As Congress President (1929) Nehru called for complete Indian independence from the British Raj and instigated civil disobedience to challenge British rule
- Congress victories in the 1937 elections were significant as they vindicated Nehru's idea of challenging British rule in favour of creating a secular national state
- The effect of the declaration of war against Germany by Britain on India without consulting the provincial ministries resulted in Congress withdrawing representatives and encouraging disobedience to challenge British rule.

- Economic motivations behind the purges may include allowing Stalin to blame economic problems on political enemies acting as 'wreckers', such as the charges of economic sabotage against the accused in the Menshevik Trial of 1931.

- Certain key workers did see improvements in wages and treatment, e.g. specialist factory workers, engineers, managers and Stakhanovites did better
- There were improvements in healthcare, e.g. the socialised system of healthcare covered millions who had not been able to access medical care before, with improvements in hospital care and the treatment of infectious diseases.

- Truman's actions in 1947 marked a decisive shift in the USA's approach, e.g. raising the Truman Doctrine's promise of support to nations to contain the spread of communism
- In giving billions of dollars of aid to the 16 OEEC nations, the Marshall Plan exacerbated the divide between Eastern and Western Europe, and further strained relations between the Soviets and the USA
- Practical disagreements over Germany had an impact on the relations, e.g. the merging of the allied zones and new currency angered Stalin.

Marking instructions

Answers must be credited according to candidates' deployment of material in relation to the qualities outlined in the generic level descriptors, given at the beginning of this mark scheme.

The indicative content below is not prescriptive and candidates are not required to include all the material which is indicated as relevant. Other relevant material not suggested below must also be credited.

Maximum 4 marks for an answer dealing with only one development.

Indicative content

Relevant points which support the statement may include:

- By ending the most significant internal challenge to Soviet control of Eastern Europe in the period, the invasion demonstrated that the Soviet Union would act firmly to defend the Warsaw Pact and ensured the continuation of communist control
- The response to the Soviet invasion demonstrated that the US accepted that existing communist nations within Eastern Europe were within a Soviet sphere of influence in which it would not intervene
- The Soviet invasion of Hungary had a negative impact on attitudes towards communist rule, e.g. significant numbers of resignations of members of communist parties in Western Europe, and c200,000 Hungarians subsequently went into exile
- Protest and popular rising against communist rule in Eastern Europe, such as in Poland and the actual uprising in Hungary, were significant in demonstrating the lack of genuine support for communism in the Eastern Bloc.

Relevant points which counter the statement may include:

- The Korean War had a major impact on relations, as a major step in the spread of the Cold War into Asia, and also demonstrated the potential of China and the role of organisations such as the UNO
- Khrushchev's attempts to reshape communist control with deStalinisation, and improving relations with the West through attempts to achieve peaceful coexistence

- The development of the arms race was significant, with both the USA and USSR developing thermonuclear weapons by 1953, with concerns on both sides over the relative strength of their military capabilities
- There were significant developments in the military alliances during the 1950s, which had wider implications for the Cold War, e.g. West Germany joining NATO raised concerns within the Soviet Bloc, prompting the formation of the Warsaw Pact.

The indicative content below is not prescriptive and candidates are not required to include all the material which is indicated as relevant. Other relevant material not suggested below must also be credited.

Indicative content

Relevant points which support the statement may include:

- Martin Luther King's abilities as a powerful and charismatic public speaker drew national attention throughout the period, e.g. Montgomery in 1955–56 and Washington 1963
- King's abilities as an organiser had an impact on the success of campaigns, through his leadership of MIA, the formation of the SCLC and demonstrations such as Birmingham, Washington and Selma
- King's non-violent approach helped win over both key political figures such as Kennedy, as well as white voters, e.g. with the dignity and peaceful protest demonstrated at the Washington march
- Under King, the SCLC contributed significantly, by helping over 430,000 black Americans register to vote in the southern states in the 20 months after the Civil Rights Act was signed in July 1964.

Relevant points which counter the statement may include:

- Elijah Muhammad and Malcolm X, as the most prominent figures in the Nation of Islam, developed black militancy and nationalism in response to the perceived failure to address conditions in Northern ghettos
- Malcolm X's split from the Nation of Islam to establish his own organisation can be seen as broadening his influence beyond the Northern ghettos (e.g. through moderating his views on whites) while continuing to inspire a more radical view
- Stokely Carmichael, as leader of SNCC, and Floyd McKissick, as chairman of CORE, developed the Black Power movement and worked with radical white organisations in the anti-draft campaign (Vietnam)

- Some civil rights leaders criticised the approach King encouraged, arguing it was acceptance of and deference to white-dominated society, with measures such as the Civil Rights Act falling far short of genuine equality.

- Students for a Democratic Society developed the Port Huron Statement (1962) condemning racism, poverty and the Cold War generally. They advocated a society where politicians, corporations and the military had less power
- The National Organisation for Women was founded in 1966 because of a need for action to create equality, partly as a result of the failure of the government to enforce the gender-equality provisions of the Civil Rights Act of 1964
- Radical feminism emerged from a generation of women who had been educated, who offered intellectual substance to challenge cultural and social inequality; some reacted to finding themselves treated as second-class status within other protest movements.

Marking instructions

Answers must be credited according to candidates' deployment of material in relation to the qualities outlined in the generic level descriptors, given at the beginning of this mark scheme.

The indicative content below is not prescriptive and candidates are not required to include all the material which is indicated as relevant. Other relevant material not suggested below must also be credited.

Maximum 4 marks for an answer dealing with only one reason.

Indicative content

Relevant points which support the statement may include:

- De Klerk was significant as the first leader who accepted that apartheid would have to end completely and be replaced by black majority rule, and so released Mandela and made the ANC and other previously banned parties legal
- Building on previous secret talks with exiled leaders, de Klerk began formal negotiations between the government and the ANC, and later through CODESA and the MPNF, leading to the ratification of the new constitution in 1993
- De Klerk took steps to steer the negotiating process through difficulties, e.g. the referendum of 1992 to diffuse white opposition, and signing the Record of Understanding to restart negotiations with the ANC.

Relevant points which counter the statement may include:

- De Klerk's actions were driven by circumstances, with the situation in South Africa having worsened, both in townships and in the impact on white South Africa, e.g. increased violence, the state of emergency, strikes, and government repression
- White South Africans increasingly came to see the regime as unfeasible in the long-term, e.g. despite media controls, they were aware of increasing problems in the townships and the lack of legitimacy of black allies in government

- The ANC played a significant role in demonstrating peaceful transition could be possible, e.g. it presented itself as a moderate party, absorbed many of the opposition supporters from the disbanded UDF and MDM, and worked closely with CONTRALESA
- The ending of the Cold War had an impact, insofar as it meant communist influence amongst opposition groups was perceived to be less of a threat, while also weakening implicit western support for South Africa as a bulwark against regional communism
- The impact of trade sanctions and disinvestment, along with the economic costs of maintaining the apartheid regime, had weakened the economy and contributed to elements of the government and white population recognising the need for change.
