Interpretation A

There was widespread and sincere admiration for Mr. Chamberlain's efforts to maintain peace. However, in writing this account it is impossible for me not to refer to the long series of miscalculations, and misjudgements which he made. The motives which inspired him have never been questioned. The course he followed required the highest degree of moral courage. To this I paid tribute two years later in my speech after his death.

From 'The Gathering Storm', a history of the Second World War by Winston Churchill, published in 1948.

Interpretation B

Here, then, was the difficulty after the war. The Western democracies wanted a form of security that would reject violence. Security was to be for everyone, it was not to be a benefit denied to some in order to provide it to others. Stalin saw things very differently: security came only by intimidating or eliminating potential challengers. The contrast, or so it would seem, made conflict unavoidable.

From 'We Now Know: Rethinking the Cold War' by the American historian John Lewis Gaddis, published in 1997. Gaddis was writing about relations between the USA and the USSR immediately after the Second World War.

Source A

We have more than 600 hectares; of these 123 are sown with cotton, 225 planted with wheat. Our vineyards cover 45 hectares. Our three lorries can hardly cope with the work. Our farmers have built 70 new houses for themselves. Look at our happy children! They all go to school. In our club dozens of farmers are learning to read and write, joining literature, agriculture and politics classes.

An extract from a speech made by a commander of a collective farm as it was being visited by a western author during the 1930s and published in 1938.

Source B

In the autumn of 1930 the land was all ploughed and the following spring sown, and the harvest was a good one. But it was time to deliver to the state and all the grain was taken away. There wouldn't be enough to sow our land. And at the present time collective farm workers with small children are perishing from hunger. They don't eat sometimes for a week and don't see a piece of bread for several days. People have begun to swell up because of hunger. And all the men have departed, despite the fact that in the near future the spring planting is coming.

- 8.* 'Life for Russians improved under Stalin in the period 1928–1941.' How far do you agree? [18]
