Globalisation*Fig. 5*An extract adapted from a text on globalisation

As regions and countries become increasingly interdependent, governments find themselves dealing with the consequences of globalisation. Changes taking place in how the global economy operates have contrasting impacts on different locations. Some countries seem to receive considerable benefits from globalisation, while others struggle to make much progress, economically or socially. And it is a complicated picture as the effects of globalisation vary within a country, for example between metropolitan areas and rural regions.
