SECTION A

The Execution of Charles I and the Interregnum 1646–1660

Study the three sources and then answer both questions:

- 1 Use your knowledge of Charles I's attitude towards a settlement to assess how useful Source A is as evidence for the issues involved in negotiations with the King during 1647–8. [10]
- 2 Using these three sources in their historical context, assess how far they support the view that Parliament brought Charles I to trial because they believed he was a traitor and a tyrant. [20]

Source A: The wife of an officer in the Parliamentary army describes the re-opening of negotiations with the King in September 1648

Commissioners from both Houses of Parliament took a treaty to the King on the Isle of Wight. The terms they agreed for his restoration betrayed their whole cause. He would not give up the bishops, but only lease out their revenues. He insisted that his one concession, acknowledging himself guilty of the blood spilt in the late war, should not be used against him. He promised all the commissioners great honours and offices if Parliament confirmed the treaty. Both Houses disputed for most of the night. Colonel Hutchinson argued that restoring the king's power, after his defeat and capture, would be inconsistent with the liberty of the people.

Lucy Hutchinson, memoirs of the Life of Colonel Hutchinson, written c1664–1671

Source B: The charges made against Charles I by the High Court of Justice set up by the Rump Parliament.

Charles Stuart, as King of England, was trusted with a limited power to govern according to the laws of the land, for the good of the people and the preservation of their liberties. Nevertheless, he traitorously and maliciously levied war against Parliament to erect an unlimited and tyrannical power, and to overthrow the people's liberties. Charles Stuart is the author and continuer of the unnatural, cruel and bloody wars: and so guilty of all the treasons, murders, burnings and damages to this nation caused by these wars.

Charges against Charles I, January 1649

Source C: The New Model Army explains why it came to demand the trial of Charles I

After the King's hard heart made him reject all the peace terms made to him by Parliament, including proposals from the army, he engineered a second Civil War by allying with the Scottish against us. Then we became convinced that God's purpose was to deal with the King as a man of blood. We regarded him and the monarchy as one of the ten horns of the Beast* which caused the shedding of the innocent blood of God's chosen people; so we petitioned our superior officers and Parliament to try the King for these crimes. Which accordingly by God's providence was brought to pass.

A declaration of the English Army now in Scotland, 1 August 1650

SECTION BThe Early Stuarts 1603–1646

Answer ONE question.

- 3 How far did religious divisions increase during the reign of James I? [20]
- 4 'The New Model Army was the most important reason for Parliament's victory in the First Civil War.' How far do you agree? [20]
